Labour Market Statistics

Mr. Hilary Benn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what revisions to the Labour Market Statistics are scheduled for April; and what the impact of such revisions will be on (a) national and local statistics and (b) relevant Department for Education and Employment policies. [155761]

Mr. Blunkett: ONS announced on 19 July 2000 that they would be introducing a new annual survey of employee jobs—the Annual Business Inquiry (ABI)—to replace the Annual Employment Survey. The new statistics will be published in the Labour Market First Release on 11 April. These data are used in national regional and local estimates of employee jobs and the national and regional Workforce Jobs series. In addition the estimates are used in the calculation of claimant count rates nationally, regionally and locally and in national and regional productivity estimates.

Work carried out by ONS established that the ABI was the better estimate of employee jobs in the economy and that the errors in the previous estimate had occurred back over time. ONS have indicated the following on the likely effects.

Early indications, from mid-2000, were that the revisions will show 500,000 to 750,000 more jobs for 1998 than previously estimated. If these indications of the scale are applied to the claimant unemployment rate, then the 1998 UK rate would be revised down by 0.2 percentage points.

The UK claimant count level is unaffected.

Productivity levels will be revised down, but growth rates will only be slightly affected by the introduction of the ABI. An improved methodology is being introduced from 1997 onwards.

Revisions will take place over the history of the series.

Locally, employee job estimates and claimant unemployment rates for regions, local authorities and parliamentary constituencies will also be revised. DfEE like all users have no indication of the scale of these revisions for each local area. The claimant count rates will be revised downwards nationally. Past experience suggests that although the local rates will in general be revised down some local claimant rates may be revised up.

As the revisions will be over the history of the series, changes over time in these series will be relatively unaffected.

There will also be annual seasonal adjustment reviews to the Labour Force Survey, claimant count and vacancies series. These do not usually lead to significant revisions.

The information available from ONS only gives some indication of the likely scale of the revisions. DfEE will fully assess any impact on our policies once we have the exact information available to us. However, the indication that changes over time will be relatively unaffected suggests that the impact on our policies will not be major.

Full details on the new statistics will be available on 11 April from the House of Commons Library.

Romania and Albania

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will list the assistance programmes her Department is funding in (a) Romania and (b) Albania. [156704]

Clare Short: Our main financial contribution to development programmes is through the EC and other multilateral agencies. Our share of EC programme commitments to Romania and Albania in 2000 was £79 million.

Activities under our bilateral programmes are as follows:

In Romania we are funding programmes for accountancy and audit reform; the Court of Audit; civil service reform; health care and child care reform; the development of a probation service; development of insurance services; energy sector regulation; social protection; education finance; mining communities; rural development; citizens advice and information services; environmental project design; environmental partnerships at municipal level; and water and wastewater services.

In Albania we are supporting the Government's Growth and Poverty Reduction Strategy and Medium Term Expenditure Framework; health financing and planning; taxation reform; media development; public administration reform; social policy and social service reform; rural livelihoods; environment; and emergency planning and disposal or ordnance.

We published a country strategy paper for Romania in October 1999, and for Albania in January 2001. Copies are in the Library of the House.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what financial assistance her Department has provided to UNICEF for its work in the protection of young refugees from (a) Romania and (b) Albania. [156705]

Clare Short: We have provided a total of £7.75 million to UNICEF for programmes in the Balkans. Of this sum, £1 million was allocated to Albania and £3.5 million for regional programmes. There was no specific allocation for Romania.

Government Expenditure Target

Mr. Patrick Hall: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what progress has been made towards meeting the Government's target for expenditure on overseas development as a proportion of gross national product. [157222]

Clare Short: My Department announced on 2 April that the UK oda/GNP ratio for calendar year 2000 is provisionally estimated at 0.31 per cent. This puts the Government on track to achieve the target of 0.33 per cent. by the financial year 2003–04.

(2) when the most recent edition of the Manual of Military Law Part III was printed; if this edition is currently in use; and if he will make a statement; [155918]

(3) if the Manual of Military Law Part III, is held by all military units; and what the policy is on Part III being held by units; [155916]

(4) if all members of the armed forces (a) have issued to them and (b) have access to the Manual of Military Law Part III; and if he will make a statement; [155919]

(5) what the legal status is of the Manual of Military Law; and if he will make a statement. [155915]

Mr. Spellar: The Manual of Military Law Part III (MML Pt III) was first published in 1958. MML Pt III is an academic legal text, a reference document for lawyers, and a detailed, if dated, commentary on the rules of war. In practice, the incorporation of legal requirement in

Rules of Engagement, courses on international law at all levels at appropriate times, and cards setting out main war crimes issued to servicemen going into combat are all more relevant to servicemen than MML Pt III. As such, MML Pt III is only one way in which the Law of Armed Conflict is disseminated in the Army.

There are no plans to reprint MML Pt III in its current form but it has not been withdrawn from circulation. Copies are still held at unit and formation level and further copies may be requested from the Central Services Establishment, Llangennech.

MML Pt III is being completely rewritten as a Joint Service Publication (JSP 383) and will therefore cover the law of armed conflict applicable to land, sea and air operations. A timetable for publication and distribution has not yet been fixed as draft texts are still being considered.

Army Recruits (Commonwealth)

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will make a statement on his plans to make greater use of the Commonwealth as a source of potential army recruits; which (a) countries and (b) specialities will be targeted; and what the budget of the recruitment exercise will be; [156793]

(2) if the plans to make greater use of the Commonwealth as a source of potential army recruits will include the recruitment of Commonwealth nationals into (a) existing regiments and units or (b) new Commonwealth regiments and units; what pay and conditions will apply; and if he will make a statement; [156794]

(3) if the plans to make greater use of the Commonwealth as a source of potential army recruits include recruitment from Commonwealth countries whose head of state is not Her Majesty the Queen; and if he will make a statement; [156795]

(4) what oath of allegiance will be taken by non-British recruits from Commonwealth countries when they are enlisted into the British Army under the plans in the Strategy for the Army. [156797]

Mr. Spellar: The Army has no plans to recruit actively from the Commonwealth and there is, therefore, no specific budget allocated to this area of recruitment. Applications are welcomed from Commonwealth citizens, subject to their meeting the normal entry criteria, irrespective of whether the Queen is head of state or not. Successful applicants are placed wherever vacancies exist according to their qualifications, performance at selection and preferences, where possible; there are no plans to institute "Commonwealth" regiments. Individuals enlist under the same terms and conditions of service as UK applicants and are required to swear an oath of allegiance to Her Majesty the Queen as head of the Commonwealth. The visits made to Fiji and St. Vincent and the Grenadines by army selection teams in 1999 and 2000 took place in order to process the large backlog of applications from these countries; no new recruitment was undertaken during these visits. The British Army has traditionally welcomed members of the Commonwealth as soldiers and officers. It is perhaps the spread of information via the world wide web and similar mediums that has increased the level of interest from overseas areas in recent months.

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many non-British citizens from Commonwealth countries are serving in the armed forces other than in training or observation roles, in each case (a) the regiment or unit in which they serve, (b) the country of which they are a citizen and (c) the terms of service; and if he will make a statement. [156796]

Mr. Spellar: The table details the numbers of non-British citizens from Commonwealth countries serving in the Army by Arm/Corps as at 1 March 2001.

The Corps combined include: Corps of Army Music, Army Physical Training Corps, Intelligence Corps, Adjutant General's Corps (Army Legal Service), Adjutant General's Corps Education and Training Service, Gurkhas, Staff, Queen Alexandra's Royal Army Nursing Corps and Royal Veterinary Corps.

Non-British citizens from Commonwealth countries serve on the same terms of service as British citizens.

It is not possible to publish data for the Royal Navy or RAF as details on nationality are not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Lairg Primary School

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he received the report of the Laboratory of the Government Chemist on its analysis of clothing taken from children at Lairg Primary School, Sutherland, following an incident on 15 February; and if he will make a statement. [156891]

Dr. Moonie: As I said in my letter of 8 March to the right hon. Member, the incident on 15 February at Lairg Primary School was being investigated. The report of the Laboratory of the Government Chemist was received by the RAF Police Defence Flying Complaints Investigation Team (DFCIT) on 27 March. The results show no trace of any aviation product or noxious substance. The full DFCIT investigation into the incident is nearing completion and I will write once the RAF Police report is to hand.

Type 22 Frigates

Mr. Quentin Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what progress he has made on the disposal of the remaining Type 22 frigates. [156675]

Dr. Moonie [holding answer 3 April 2001]: Final disposal options on the remaining Type 22 frigates—HMS Boxer, HMS London and HMS Brave—are currently being considered. HMS Beaver, the first of the Type 22s declared surplus under the 1998 Strategic Defence Review, has been sold in a non-operational condition to the commercial market.

PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL

Death Penalty

Mr. Cox: To ask the President of the Council how many cases are under consideration by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council concerning the possible use of the death penalty; and if she will list the countries to which they relate. [156190]

Mrs. Beckett: There is a total of 16 cases, involving 19 persons under sentence of death, currently pending in the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council. These figures are made up as follows:

Appeals heard and awaiting judgment: five (involving six persons)

Appeals waiting to be heard: five (involving six persons)

Petitions for special leave to appeal waiting to be heard: five (involving six persons)

Petition granted, but appeal not yet registered: one.

The cases come from Antigua and Barbuda (two cases), The Bahamas (two), Belize (three), Grenada (three), Jamaica (one), St. Lucia (one), St. Vincent and the Grenadines (one) and Trinidad and Tobago (three).

PRIME MINISTER

Foot and Mouth

Mr. Cash: To ask the Prime Minister what emergency powers he has to take action to halt the spread of foot and mouth disease; and which such powers he has exercised. [156121]

The Prime Minister: The Animal Health Act 1981 and the Foot and Mouth Disease Order 1983 provide the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food with a wide range of powers to control the disease. These include powers:

to detain the movement of animals and other things while conducting a veterinary inquiry into suspected disease to slaughter animals affected or suspected of being affected by disease or which have been in contact with infected animals or which have in any way been exposed to the infection of the disease to impose disease control rules to be observed within an infected place to impose infected area restrictions around an infected premises in accordance with EU rules to apply restrictions to animals exposed to disease to order the cleansing and disinfection of premises and vehicles to control the disposal of manure, slurry and litter in an infected area to require stray animals to be controlled in an infected area to control milk produced in an infected area to close footpaths and prevent entry onto land (including roads) or premises in an infected area to prohibit certain sporting and recreational activities (such as hunting and point to point meetings) in an infected area to apply movement controls to or from slaughterhouses to apply movement restrictions on animals and other controls within a controlled area (which at present covers the whole of Great Britain) to prohibit hunting and stalking in a controlled area to prohibit the holding of fairs, markets, shows or other gatherings of animals.

All these powers have been exercised at various junctures since the date of the first confirmation of the disease. They have been supplemented by the following measures:

within a controlled area, the power to allow the Minister (or a local authority with the prior agreement of the Minister) to close roads granting a temporary easing of the drivers hours rules for various types of operation affected by foot and mouth (including the transport of animal feed, livestock, agricultural products, disinfectant and milk) restriction of exports to member states of certain products amended rules as regards the closure of footpaths and prohibited areas disinfection of tyres of road vehicles transported out of the UK establishment of a flat rate valuation for slaughtered animals.

The scope of powers available is kept under constant review in the light of developments.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Departmental Press Office

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many non-career civil servants there are in his Department's Press Office; in what position; and how much (a) they and (b) career civil servants of equivalent rank are paid. [156823]

Mr. Wilson [holding answer 3 April 2001]: Two: Head of News and one Press Officer. Both officers' salaries fall within the pay scales appropriate to their grade. We do not disclose individual officers' salaries.

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what the procedure is for appointing non-career civil servants in his Department's Press Office. [156822]

Mr. Wilson [holding answer 3 April 2001]: All recruitment to the Foreign and Commonwealth Office is conducted under the Civil Service Commissioner's Recruitment Rules. We either recruit using fair and open recruitment competitions, or make use of the flexibility allowed in the Commissioners' Recruitment Code for short term appointments of up to 12 months.

Iraq

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with his (a) United Nations and (b) United States counterparts regarding non-military sanctions against Iraq.[4] [156540]

Mr. Wilson [holding answer 3 April 2001]: The Secretary of State holds regular discussions with US and other key allies on all aspects of Iraq policy, including that of non-military sanctions. UK representatives have regular contact with UN officials.

Air Passenger Duty

Mr. Austin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list those EU member states which make a distinction between EU member states and candidate countries in the application of air passenger duty; and if he will make a statement. [156831]

Mr. Timms: I have been asked to reply.

It is not possible to provide the information requested. Air passenger duty is specific to the UK. Other EU member states' air travel taxation systems do not operate on the same basis.

Mr. Austin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the compatibility of proposed changes to air passenger duty with the Czech-UK Agreement on Air Services signed in Prague on 20 March 1998. [156829]

Mr. Timms: I have been asked to reply.

It is the assessment of the UK Government that the changes to air passenger duty that were introduced on 1 April 2001 are compatible with the Czech Republic-UK Agreement on Air Services signed in Prague on 20 March 1998.

Mr. Austin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if candidate countries to the European Union will be treated as EU member states for the purposes of air passenger duty from the time that the European Common Aviation Area multilateral agreement becomes applicable. [156830]

Mr. Timms: I have been asked to reply.

Candidate countries to the European Union will be treated as EU member states for air passenger duty purposes only when they have completed the accessionary process.

Mr. Austin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the impact on competitiveness of changes in air passenger duty on flights within the European Economic Area; and if he will make a statement. [156827]

Mr. Timms: I have been asked to reply.

The changes to air passenger duty implemented on 1 April 2001 should have a positive impact on the UK's competitiveness within the European Economic Area. For those passengers travelling economy class the duty is reduced to £5.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Film

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many people are employed in (a) the British Film Commission, (b) the Arts Council of England's Lottery Film Department, (c) the British Film Institute's Production Department, (d) British Screen Finance and (d) the British Film Institute; and how many were employed in April (i) 1999 and (ii) 2000. [156149]

Mr. Chris Smith: The British Film Commission, Arts Council of England's Lottery Film Department and the British Film Institute's Production Department were absorbed into the Film Council on 1 April 2000. British Screen Finance transferred to the Film Council on 1 October 2000. The Film Council currently employs 73 staff.[1]

Figures for preceding years are as follows:

	April 1999	April 2000[2]
British Film Commission	11	11
Arts Council of England's Lottery Film Department	11	13
British Film Institute's Production Department	9	11
British Screen Finance	17	15
British Film Institute[3]	445	403
Total	541	524

[1] The Film Council staff total takes into account staff for finance, business affairs, policy and industry training functions which previously either did or did not exist as activities or were functions undertaken by external lawyers and accountants or by other departments within the Arts Council or the British Film Institute.
[2] In respect of all but British Film Institute figures, these relate to the numbers of staff transferring into the Film Council on 1 April 2000.
[3] Figures are based on averages for the year. These figures exclude British Film Institute Production but include externally funded staff of 48 in 1999, 71 in 2000 and 83 at present: these staff are on fixed-term contracts and are funded by a grant from the Heritage Lottery Fund for restoration work at the BFI Archive in Berkhamsted.

Arts Funding (Liverpool)

Mrs. Ellman: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how much funding was available for the arts in Liverpool (a) since 1997 and (b) between 1993 and 1997. [156458]

Mr. Alan Howarth: For the financial years 1993–2000 the figures for grant in aid allocated to the arts in Liverpool are as follows:

Year	£
1994	1,678,132
1995	1,284,251
1996	1,648,064
1997	1,766,049
1998	1,712,828
1999	2,090,915
2000	[1]4,112,172
2001	[2]—

[1] Includes delegation of the Royal Liverpool Philharmonic Orchestra from the Arts Council of England
[2] Figures for 2000–01 will not be available until the audited accounts are released later in the year

The total Lottery allocation to Liverpool from 1995 to date has been £21,434,276. I have asked the Arts Council for a breakdown of this figure and will write to my hon. Friend when the information is available.

Listed Sporting Events

Mr. Wyatt: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will make a statement on paragraph 9 of the revised ITC code on sports and other listed events, regarding the Government's policy on listed sporting events. [156566]

Janet Anderson: The Government's policy is to ensure that free to air broadcasters, with a reach of at least 95 per cent. of the population, are given a fair and reasonable opportunity to acquire the rights to broadcast live coverage of "crown jewel" events. As paragraph 9 of the ITC code—last revised in January 2000—explains, it does not guarantee that the event will be broadcast live. Rights holders are not obliged to sell live rights and broadcasters are not obliged to purchase them or to show the events. However, any UK broadcaster that obtains the rights to live coverage of the whole or part of a listed event cannot broadcast exclusively live in the UK without first seeking the consent of the ITC.

Foot and Mouth

Mr. Woodward: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what assessment he has made of the impact of the foot and mouth outbreak on safari and wildlife parks. [156681]

Janet Anderson [holding answer 3 April 2001]: My Department has made no special assessment of the impact of the foot and mouth outbreak on safari and wildlife parks.

However, my Department is in touch with the Federation of Zoological Gardens of Great Britain and Ireland, which includes wildlife and safari parks in its membership, about the implications of the foot and mouth outbreak. They have been involved in developing Government guidance on the circumstances in which visitor attractions should open. The Federation estimates that in the first four weeks of the outbreak, the zoo, wildlife and safari park sector lost approximately £3.5 million in revenue.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Fraud

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the (a) policy and (b) legal reasons that prohibit his Department and its agencies from joining (i) the Credit Industry Fraud Avoidance System and (ii) the National Hunter System. [156473]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 2 April 2001]: We cannot join the Credit Industry Fraud Avoidance System (CIFAS) because it would entail DSS making data about claimants available to the private sector. Members of CIFAS seek their customers' consent to this. In the case of social security benefits, I am advised that making entitlement to benefits conditional upon claimants' giving consent to release of their personal data to organisations such as CIFAS would not constitute real consent, as the claimants often have no choice but to claim benefits from DSS. The alternative of releasing information only for those claimants that gave their consent would be valueless, as fraudsters would hardly be likely to give such consent.

However, we have set up a working party with the private sector to examine what information held by the DSS could be made available within existing legal constraints.

The National Hunter system is a computer software programme which checks for inconsistencies with respect to applications for mortgages. As we procure new IT we will build in the capability we require. The Department is specifying requirements and it is the suppliers' job to decide what form the solutions should take. The Department is deliberately not seeking to lead the suppliers in the direction of specific solutions.

Home Visits

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate he has made of (a) the number of his Department's staff making home visits in the last year, (b) the total number of home visits made, (c) the total number of homes visited and (d) the number of such homes that were also visited by local authority staff in the same period. [156531]

Angela Eagle [holding answer 2 April 2001]: The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is that for the period April 2000 to February 2001 when 1,251,280 home visits were made by 6,332 staff.

Child Support

Dr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what action he proposes to take in respect of the recent decisions of a social security commissioner in relation to the operation of the Social Security Act 1998 and the Social Security and Child Support (Decisions and Appeals) Regulations 1999; and if he will make a statement. [153384]

Angela Eagle: We do not propose to take any action in relation to these decisions.

The Commissioner confirms the approach taken by decision makers in relation to the operation of the Social Security Act 1998 and the Social Security and Child Support (Decisions and Appeals) Regulations 1999. That is, decision makers can make the decision to 'supersede at the same rate' where there is a change of circumstances but it does not change the existing award, and can refuse to supersede a decision where the application cannot possibly affect the existing award.

The Commissioner also held that it is necessary for a new claim for benefit to be made, in all cases, before there can be a supersession for change of circumstances. It is our view that this was a ruling on a point of law which was incidental to the decisions reached, rather than a necessary part of the legal reasoning. Accordingly, the Commissioner's decisions on this point do not constitute binding rulings. For that reason we have decided not to appeal these decisions and we have not asked for existing guidance to decision makers to be altered.

Foot and Mouth

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what his estimate is of the percentage of farmers who have had their farm livestock slaughtered as a consequence of foot and mouth disease who will be entitled to claim unemployment benefit. [156556]

Angela Eagle: No such estimate has been made.

Pensions

Mr. Davidson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what discussions he has had with pensioner organisations in Scotland about initiatives to inform older people of their rights. [156571]

Mr. Rooker: Ministers regularly meet representatives of pensioner organisations, including those based in Scotland. On 2 March 2001 we published a Scottish edition of our pensioners guide which provides information of a range of help and advice available to older people through central and local Government.

Mr. Davidson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what changes have been made since 1997 to pension and social security provision for pensioners living in poverty. [156575]

Mr. Rooker: The poorest pensioners will have gained from some or all of the extra increases in basic State Pension, tax allowances and Minimum Income Guarantee, together with Winter Fuel Payments and free TV licences.

As a result of tax and benefit measures introduced by this Government, the poorest pensioner households on the MIG will, on average, be at least £15 a week, or £800 a year, better off in real terms.

Winter Fuel Allowance (Paisley, South)

Mr. Alexander: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many over 60s in Paisley South qualify for the winter fuel allowance. [156862]

Mr. Rooker: Latest information shows that nearly 14,000 Winter Fuel Payments have been made in Paisley, South.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Rover Taskforce

Miss Kirkbride: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will provide a breakdown of the costs of each of the projects involving the Rover taskforce and indicate how much of the funding allocated to it remains to be distributed. [156776]

Mr. Byers: The following is a list of projects which I have approved and which count against the £129 million (originally offered to BMW for investment at Longbridge) which I made available to support good quality projects in the West Midlands.

Initial actions and administrative uplift for Advantage West Midlands (AWM)	300,536
Modernisation of the automotive base	27,720,000
Diversifying the regional economy	20,152,000
Support to the workforce[2]	35,000
Support to families and the community	70,000
Regenerating the area[3]	22,250,000
Grants offered to firms under the Regional Selective Assistance (RSA) scheme	37,250,000
Support towards Staffordshire taskforce proposals	1,973,000
Acquisition of Industrial Land for the Automotive Sector	10,000,000
Proposals which are presently commercially sensitive	9,000,000
Total allocated against the £129 million	128,750,536
Total unallocated against the £129 million	249,464

[1] Estimated cost
[2] This does not include expenditure by the Employment Service
[3] The regeneration projects arising from the Rover taskforce final report have not yet been approved as I am awaiting details of these proposals. However, an amount of £22,000,000 has been allocated to these proposals and will count against the £129 million

Ministerial Meetings

Mr. Randall: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many ministerial meetings with hon. Members have been cancelled by Ministers since 1 January. [155235]

Mr. Byers: Two meetings between DTI Ministers and hon. Members have been cancelled since 1 January 2001.

Gas-fired Power Stations

Maria Eagle: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he will announce his decision on BP Energy Ltd.'s proposal to build a combined heat and power gas-fired power station at the Jaguar works at Halewood. [157220]

Mr. Byers: I have today given consent under section 36 of the Electricity Act 1989 to BP Energy Ltd. and clearance under section 14(1) of the Energy Act 1976, to build a 70 megawatt gas-fired combined heat and power station at the Jaguar works at Halewood near Liverpool. Planning permission for the station was granted subject to 51 conditions agreed with Knowsley Metropolitan borough council.

Combined heat and power plants are designed to produce both electricity and usable heat. They have environmental benefits due to their high levels of energy efficiency.

The decision demonstrates the Government's continuing commitment to promote CHP, wherever practicable, and our commitment to reducing emissions of greenhouse gases to fulfil the promises we gave at Kyoto.

The decision also shows the commitment of Ford to Merseyside as the power station will supply the current and future needs of the Jaguar works which will shortly be producing a new range.

Copies of the press notice and decision letter are being placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. Anthony D. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he will announce his decision on Great Yarmouth Power Ltd.'s application to increase the size of the South Denes gas-fired power station. [157221]

Mr. Byers: I have today granted consent to increase the size of the South Denes 350 MW combined cycle gas turbine power station to 400 MW. The extension is a result of new technology which is more efficient than that originally proposed and will result in a reduction of emissions while delivering the same power.

Copies of the press notice and decision letter are being placed in the Library of the House.

Employment Tribunals (Scotland)

Mr. Grieve: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what restrictions there are on his powers to appoint in Scotland chairmen and part-time chairmen of employment tribunals to Scottish advocates or solicitors only. [156792]

Mr. Alan Johnson [holding answer 3 April 2001]: Under regulations made by my Department, the appointment of chairmen and part-time chairmen of employment tribunals in Scotland is the responsibility of the Lord President of the Court of Session. The regulations stipulate that appointees must be advocates or solicitors of not less than seven years standing.

Mr. Grieve: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry for what period of office part-time chairmen of employment tribunals in Scotland are appointed; on what grounds such part-time chairmen may be removed from office; and what the procedures are for effecting such removal from office. [156791]

Mr. Alan Johnson [holding answer 3 April 2001]: Part-time chairmen of employment tribunals in Scotland are appointed for a term of five years, which is renewable. It would be for the Lord President of the Court of Session to consider whether any part-time chairman should be removed from office. In considering the case for a removal, he would be guided by the model rules of procedure on these matters as published by the Lord Chancellor last year. The procedure to be followed would be a matter for the Lord President in the light of his consideration of the circumstances of each case.

Departmental Policies (High Peak)

Mr. Levitt: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will set out, with statistical information relating as directly as possible to the constituency, the effects on the High Peak constituency of his Department's policies and actions since May 1997. [156780]

Mr. Caborn: The constituency of High Peak has benefited from a range of initiatives since May 1997 including:

Regional Selective Assistance—a discretionary grant which provides assistance towards capital projects which would not otherwise go ahead and will create or safeguard employment in an Assisted Area. Until 31 December 1999 the High Peak area was in an Assisted Area and up to this date grants totalling £455,000 were offered to three companies supporting total capital expenditure of £3,523,000 with the aim of safeguarding 30 existing full-time jobs and creating in excess of 80 new full-time jobs.

Enterprise Grant—a new discretionary grant introduced in 2000. Provides support to SMEs investing in capital projects which would not otherwise go ahead. Although SMEs investing in capital projects in the Peveril ward of High Peak district council, no grants have yet been awarded in this area.

Smart—discretionary grant available to SMEs to help them develop technologically innovative products and processes. Grant totalling £346,857 has been offered to six projects supporting total projects costs in excess of £837,000.

Business Link—the Business Link network provides a wide range of business advice and support to SMEs. It is not possible to accurately isolate Business Link data for the High Peak constituency area. However, from 1997 to date, Business Link North Derbyshire, which now includes the High Peak constituency, has helped a total of 4,987 businesses and assisted 1,422 business start ups.

European Regional Development Fund (ERDF)—in addition to its domestic initiatives, the Department of Trade and Industry is also the lead Department for European Structural Funds in the UK. Under ERDF Objective 5b (1994–1999) and the LEADER II Community Initiative, High Peak has benefited from £1.23 million. The projects supported have delivered a range of industrial premises, business support and small community projects.

I understand that my hon. Friend has also asked a similar question in respect of DETR policies and programmes.

Miners (Compensation)

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many claims have been registered by ex-miners suffering from respiratory disease who are resident in the constituencies of (a) Caerphilly, (b) Llanelli, (c) Merthyr Tydfil and Rhymney, (d) Neath, (e) Clwyd South, (f) Wrexham and (g) Pontypridd. [155645]

Mr. Hain [holding answer 28 March 2001]: IRISC, the Department's claims handlers, do not collect data by constituency. The following information is collated by reference to the postcodes most closely mapping onto the constituencies in question. The number of claims in respect of respiratory disease in the areas defined by these postcodes are listed in the table:

Constituency within defined area	Postcode defined area	Number of claims for respiratory disease
Caerphilly	CF 46, 81–83; NP 1	3,231
Llanelli	SA 14–17	1,308
Merthyr Tydfil and Rhymney	NP 2–3; CF 44, 46–48	3,635
Neath	SA 8–11, 18	3,636
Clwyd South	LL 13–14, 20–21; SY 10	516
Wrexham	LL 11–13	502

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many claims for compensation for respiratory disease have been made by ex-miners living in the constituencies of (a) Aberavon, (b) Newport, East, (c) Ogmore, (d) Blaenau Gwent, (e) Bridgend, (f) Rhondda, (g) Islwyn and (h) East Carmarthen and Dinefwr. [155642]

Mr. Hain [holding answer 27 March 2001]: IRISC, the Department's claims handlers, do not collect data by constituency. The information is collated by reference to the postcodes most closely mapping onto the constituencies in question. The number of claims in respect of respiratory disease in the areas defined by these postcodes are listed in the table:

New Businesses (Shrewsbury and Atcham)

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will estimate the number of new businesses in each industrial category started in Shrewsbury and Atcham since 1997; and if he will make a statement. [156512]

Mr. Caborn: The number of businesses, by broad industrial sector, joining the VAT register in the Shrewsbury and Atcham local authority district in each of the last three years for which data are available, is set out in the table.

Business start-ups and closures: VAT registrations and de-registrations, National Statistics.

During the period 1 January 1997 to 31 December 1999 some 755 businesses in Shrewsbury and Atcham left the VAT register.

During the same period therefore, the stock of VAT registered businesses in Shrewsbury and Atcham increased by 50 (1.7 per cent). The equivalent percentage increase for the West Midlands region was 1.2 per cent. and for the UK 3.4 per cent.

NETA

Fiona Mactaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what the terms of reference are of the review of the initial impact of NETA on smaller generators; and when he will publish its conclusions; [156237]

(2) what steps he has taken to ensure that NETA does not prejudice combined heat and power schemes. [156234]

Mr. Hain: In consultation with the industry, ways have been developed to ensure that smaller generators are be able to trade effectively under NETA, which was implemented on 27 March. These include the ability for a licence-exempt generator to consolidate the output of its plant with that of the plant of other licence-exempt generators in order to reduce any potential exposure to imbalance.

However, in the light of the continuing concern among some smaller generators about the potential impact of NETA on their businesses, I announced in February that I had asked Ofgem to undertake a review of the initial impact of NETA on smaller generators, based on its first two months of live operation.

Ofgem are planning to submit draft terms of reference for this review to me shortly, and they will be published once I have approved them. The issue of timing will be addressed in the terms of reference. The continuing success of combined heat and power and renewables is very important to the Government and Ofgem are well aware of their own regulatory responsibility in this respect.

Company Rescue

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will publish the responses to the report of the joint DTI/Treasury working group on company rescue and business reconstruction mechanisms. [157150]

Mr. Byers: The report of the working group, which was published in November 2000, was followed by a further consultation period, which has now concluded. It will take some time to digest the responses from consultees and firm up our ideas on these proposals. In the interim, I have decided to publish the responses and copies have now been placed in the Library of each House and will appear shortly on the website of my Department's Insolvency Service.

Post Office

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry pursant to his answer of 17 January 2001, Official Report, columns 234–35W, if he will place in the Library a copy of the Post Office Chief Executive's answer to his letter of 17 November 2000. [149219]

Mr. Alan Johnson [holding answer 8 February 2001]: The Post Office Chief Executive has been consulted and has said that his letter was not intended for publication and he does not consider it appropriate to place a copy in the Library of the House.

Statutory Right to Contract

Mr. Page: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what work his Department has carried out on examining the effectiveness of the operation of the statutory right to contract legislation. [R] [155790]

Ms Hewitt [holding answer 27 March 2001]: I understand the hon. Member is referring to the statutory right of interest legislation.

We have continued to monitor payment times in the UK since the introduction of the Late Payment of Commercial Debts (Interest) Act 1998. Recent surveys have provided encouraging signs of improvement.

Research published by Dun and Bradstreet last month shows that UK companies are now the second fastest in Europe for paying their bills on time. Although all national performances have improved since the previous surveys, UK companies produced the greatest improvement, identifying a continuing downward trend in UK payment times in recent years.

In addition, a quarterly survey published by the Credit Management Research Centre in March 2001 indicated a continued improvement in payment culture with larger firms exhibiting the most improved payment behaviour.

Radioactively Contaminated Land

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the nuclear sites operated by (a) BNFL, (b) the UKAEA and (c) British Energy which contain areas of radioactively contaminated land; and what steps have been taken to remediate contaminated areas on each respective site. [156400]

Mr. Hain: BNFL operates nuclear licensed sites at Sellafield, Springfields, Capenhurst, Drigg, and Chapelcross and Hunterston A nuclear power stations. Magnox Electric plc (a subsidiary of BNFL) operates Sizewell A, Bradwell, Dungeness A, Oldbury, Berkeley, Hinkley Point A, Wylfa and Trawsfynydd nuclear power stations.

British Energy operates Torness, Hunterston B, Hartlepool, Sizewell B, Dungeness B, Hinkley Point B, Heysham 1 and Heysham 2 nuclear power stations.

UKAEA operates sites at Dounreay, Harwell, Windscale and Winfrith.

I understand from HSE that all these sites may have areas of radioactively contaminated land. Nuclear site licensees are responsible for the safe management of all radioactive material on their sites. They are also required to manage areas of contaminated land in accordance with the conditions of the nuclear site licence so that such areas do not present a hazard to the work force or to the public. I understand that BNFL, BE and UKAEA will write to my hon. Friend shortly with information on their contamination remediation procedures.

Business Regulations

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will estimate how many regulations affecting business have been repealed since 1997; and if he will make a statement. [156503]

Mr. Stringer: I have been asked to reply.

An estimate of the total number of regulations affecting business that have been repealed since 1997 could be provided only at disproportionate cost. However, since 1997, 23 deregulation orders have been made under the Deregulation and Contracting Out Act 1994 (DCOA).

The Government are determined to minimise the burden of regulation on business. That is why we are taking through Parliament a Regulatory Reform Bill, which builds on the powers of the DCOA and will make it easier to reform outdated, over-complex or overlapping legislation. We have already identified over 50 reforms that could be achieved by this means.

Each Department already has a continuing programme of regulatory reform. The DTI, for example, is reviewing several significant areas of regulation, including communications and company law, and is actively seeking to add to the five potential regulatory reform orders it has already proposed.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Police Retirements

Ms Kelly: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proportion of police officers have retired as a result of ill health in each year since 1990. [154512]

Mr. Charles Clarke [holding answer 21 March 2001]: Figures for medical retirements between 1990–91 and 1999–2000 are set out in the table.

Year	Medical retirements as a percentage of all retirements
1990–91	62
1991–92	62
1992–93	60
1993–94	53
1994–95	53
1995–96	46
1996–97	45
1997–98	47
1998–99	39
1999–2000	31

Essex Constabulary

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) funded and (b) actual police officers there were in the Essex Constabulary in each year from March 1997 to the latest date for which figures are available. [154484]

Mr. Charles Clarke [holding answer 19 March 2001]: The information requested is set out in the table. The funded police numbers have been provided by the Chief Constable of the Essex Police.

The Home Office Statistical Bulletin on police service strength provides numbers of police officers available for ordinary duty, as opposed to all officers in each force. Officers on secondment, for example, on maternity leave or undertaking full-time further education, are excluded from the figures. This is the basis used in the table for the number of actual police officers.

Essex police—funded police posts and actual police numbers

Year	Number of funded policed posts (fte)	Actual number of police officers (fte)
31 March 1997	2,944	2,961
31 March 1998	2,947	2,928
31 March 1999	2,923	2,891
31 March 2000	2,859	2,806
31 March 2001	2,955	[1]2,859

[1] Numbers as at 31 January 2001. The force returns for strength as at 31 March 2001 for the purposes of the Home Office Statistical Bulletin are not yet available.
Fte = Full-time equivalent.

The force strength (actual numbers) figures for 31 March 1997 and as at 7 February 2001, set out in my answer to the hon. Member on 15 February 2001, Official Report, column 240W, were obtained from the Chief Constable of the force. Upon inquiry, it appears that the force classified some officers differently from the method used under Home Office counting rules for the half yearly Statistical Bulletin. This is the reason for the differences between the numbers in that answer and the numbers given here.

Fire Service

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what reviews on the future of the Fire Service are in progress; when he will make announcements on them; and if he will make a statement. [156773]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The Government have a continuing programme of work in partnership with fire service and other interests to modernise the fire service, to reduce the incidence of fire and related death, injury and damage and to ensure the safety of the public. Details are set out in the Home Office Annual Report for 2000–01 (Cm 5106). We are also listening to the views of the Fire Community on the wider future of fire services.

National Asylum Support Service

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if it is his policy to refuse relocation under the National Asylum Support Service allocation rules on grounds of severe clinical depression. [156471]

Mrs. Roche [holding answer 2 April 2001]: Dispersal is only considered where the asylum seeker has requested that accommodation be provided as part of an application for support. A decision on whether dispersal is appropriate is taken by the National Asylum Support Service after full and careful consideration of all the known facts. Any medical advice that dispersal is inappropriate would also be taken into account.

Grants (London Boroughs)

Ms Buck: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list (a) each category of grant and (b) the amount of each grant paid by his Department to each London borough in (i) 1997–98, (ii) 1998–1999, (iii) 1999–2000 and (iv) 2000–01; and what the projected figure is for 2001–02. [155430]

Mr. Straw: I will write to my hon. Friend and place a copy of my letter in the Library.

Anti-semitism

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on anti-Semitic incidents in the last six months; and what representations he has received on the causes of such incidents. [156562]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Anti-Semitic incidents are not recorded separately by the Home Office. The police in the year 1999–2000 recorded 47,814 racist incidents. The Board of Deputies of British Jews recorded some 221 anti-Semitic incidents in the six months from September 2000 to February 2001.

I have not received any specific representations on the causes of such incidents. I have, with my ministerial colleagues, met with representatives of the Jewish and Muslim communities in the last six months to discuss concerns that the situation in the Middle East should not lead to a breakdown in the good relations between the communities in the United Kingdom.

West Mercia Constabulary (Shrewsbury Division)

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the effectiveness of the use of anti-social behaviour orders in the Shrewsbury Division of West Mercia constabulary. [156505]

Mr. Charles Clarke: We do not monitor the effectiveness of individual orders centrally. However, I understand from West Mercia police that six anti-social behaviour orders have been issued in the Shrewsbury Division. The orders have all been very effective. Four of them have been targeted on the ringleaders of a gang threatening residents in a village within the Division. Since the orders have been in force, the anti-social behaviour has stopped, and the remaining members of the gang have dispersed.

This is a fine example of what we set out to achieve with anti-social behaviour orders, and I congratulate West Mercia police on obtaining them.

Foot and Mouth

Mr. Sawford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what powers are available to (a) the Police, (b) local authorities and (c) landowners in order to control dogs in the countryside; and if he will undertake a review of these powers. [156712]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Under section 2 of the Animals Act 1971, where a dog causes damage by killing or injuring livestock, any person who is a keeper of the dog is liable for the damage. If a dog trespasses onto another's land then if the owner allowed the dog to trespass wilfully or to search for game, the owner is liable for any damage to the owner's livestock.

Under section 9 of the 1971 Act a landowner or the owner of the livestock or an employee of the landowner or the owner of the livestock has a defence to killing or injuring a dog worrying livestock if either:

the dog is worrying or is about to worry the livestock and there are no other reasonable means of ending of preventing the worrying; or the dog has been worrying livestock, has not left the vicinity and is not under the control of any person and there are no practicable means of ascertaining to whom it belongs.

The collection and detention of stray dogs is provided for under sections 149–150 of the Environment Protection Act 1990. Animal wardens are authorised officers under the Act and undertake work on behalf of the local authority which is their employer. The police also accept stray dogs when they are brought into police stations. Section 27 of the Road Traffic Act 1988 requires that dogs be kept on a leash on public roads, and local authorities can make byelaws to require that dogs be kept on a leash in certain parks, public gardens and amenity areas.

Any dogs in an area infected with foot and mouth disease must be kept under control by their owners. This means that they must either:

be kept in a kennel or enclosure from which they cannot escape; or be effectively secured to a fixed object by a collar and chain; or

be accompanied by and under the effectual control of the owner or a responsible person authorised by the owner.

In an area declared to be infected with foot and mouth disease a dog must not run free; if it does, it can be seized by the local authority or the police and treated as a stray.

In addition, a Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food Inspector may serve a notice on anyone in the infected area to keep a dog under specific controls.

Dogs which are kept under proper control are not prevented from being moved. Certain sporting activities involving dogs are not allowed in areas infected with foot and mouth disease.

The need for additional powers to deal with foot and mouth is being kept under constant review. This includes the control of dogs in infected areas.

There are no plans to review the wider law relating to the control of dogs in the countryside, although the measures in place to combat the spread of foot and mouth disease are being kept under constant review.

Mr. Sawford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will take steps to give additional powers to (a) the Police, (b) local authorities and (c) landowners in order to control dogs in the countryside during the outbreak of foot and mouth disease. [156711]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Any dogs in an area infected with Foot and Mouth Disease must be kept under control by their owners. This means that they must either:

be kept in a kennel or enclosure from which they cannot escape; or

be effectively secured to a fixed object by a collar and chain; or

be accompanied by, and under the effectual control of, the owner or a responsible person authorised by the owner.

In an area declared to be infected with Foot and Mouth Disease a dog must not run free; if it does, it can be seized by the local authority or the police and treated as a stray.

In addition, a Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food Inspector may serve a notice on anyone in the infected area to keep a dog under specific controls.

Dogs which are kept under proper control are not prevented from being moved. Certain sporting activities involving dogs are not allowed in areas infected with Foot and Mouth Disease.

The need for additional powers to deal with Foot and Mouth is being kept under constant review. This includes the control of dogs in infected areas.

Visitor Numbers

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what would be the cost of counting visitors into and out of the UK; and if he will make a statement. [155587]

Mrs. Roche: A precise figure is not available, but the cost of recording electronically the admissions and departures of all non-European Economic Area nationals is provisionally estimated to be around £20 million a year. This estimate includes the costs of reintroducing embarkation controls, which were discontinued in 1998.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Foot and Mouth

Mr. Gray: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if the Government will pay the additional cost to abattoirs of higher veterinary costs and those arising from the removal of (a) manure, (b) lorry solids and (c) guts and blood following the outbreak of foot and mouth disease. [153891]

Ms Quin [holding answer 19 March 2001]: The Government have agreed that they will pay for the more intensive ante mortem inspections and supervision of cleansing and disinfection of wagons that is currently being carried out by the Meat Hygiene Service as a result of the foot and mouth outbreak.

Slaughterhouses, as with any other premises where livestock are kept, may need to comply with statutory requirements for the removal of manure, lorry solids and guts and blood, as part of the controls in place to deal with the foot and mouth outbreak. There are no plans for Government to reimburse costs associated with these functions.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will take steps to ban the import of meat and meat products from countries outside the EU (a) where foot and mouth disease is (i) prevalent and (ii) suspected and (b) where antibodies may be present in animals as a result of vaccination. [154824]

Ms Quin: The importation of meat is permitted from a limited number of third countries where foot and mouth disease is present and where the veterinary authorities have contained the disease in specified regions. EC rules permit imports from those regions of the relevant countries that are not considered to pose a risk to human or animal health. Fully matured boneless beef, which does not pose an FMD risk, may in some cases be imported from other regions subject to veterinary certification. Countries to which these controls currently apply are Botswana, Namibia, South Africa, Swaziland, Zimbabwe, Argentina, Brazil, Colombia and Uruguay. Because of their FMD situation, prohibitions are currently in place on imports from South Africa, Swaziland and Argentina; countries from which imports were previously permitted. All meat imported from third countries is subject to veterinary checks at Border Inspection Posts to ensure that import requirements are met.

There are no controls relating specifically to the presence of antibodies as a result of vaccination. However import of meat from countries which vaccinate is subject to controls and certification to ensure that the beef is matured and boneless and that meat from pigs and ruminants other than bovines comes from unvaccinated animals from an FMD free region.

Mr. Gill: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many reports his Department received in December 2000 of an outbreak of foot and mouth disease; and what actions he took. [154928]

Ms Quin [holding answer 22 March 2001]: No outbreaks or suspected cases of foot and mouth disease were reported in December 2000.

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what measures were taken by his Department to deal with any outbreaks of foot and mouth disease in the United Kingdom prior to the public announcements made on 19 February in response to the infection reported at a Brentwood abattoir. [154851]

Ms Quin [holding answer 22 March 2001]: Prior to the current outbreak, the most recent case of foot and mouth disease in the UK was in 1981 when there was one isolated case on the Isle of Wight.

The Ministry has contingency plans for dealing with foot and mouth disease and these have been subject to regular review.

Mr. Stephen O'Brien: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if his Department received unconfirmed reports of possible foot and mouth disease in the United Kingdom during 2000; [154957]

(2) what procedures his Department had in place to deal with unconfirmed reports of cases of foot and mouth disease in the United Kingdom over the 12 months up to 19 February; [154961]

(3) what investigations were carried out in respect of each unconfirmed report received by his Department of a case of foot and mouth disease in the United Kingdom over the 12 months up to 19 February. [154955]

Ms Quin [holding answer 22 March 2001]: Any person who suspects that an animal may be affected by foot and mouth disease is required by the Foot and Mouth Order 1983 to notify the Ministry. Similar arrangements apply in Northern Ireland. Any such notification would immediately result in veterinary investigations being undertaken. No cases of suspected foot and mouth disease were reported to the Agriculture Departments over the 12 months up to 19 February 2001.

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information was passed to EU officials by his Department regarding outbreaks of foot and mouth disease in the United Kingdom in 2000. [154850]

Ms Quin [holding answer 22 March 2001]: There were no outbreaks of foot and mouth disease in the United Kingdom during 2000. In consequence no information regarding outbreaks was passed to EU officials.

Mr. Pickles: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if (a) he, (b) ministerial colleagues or (c) officials were informed of (i) suspected cases of and (ii) increased risk of foot and mouth in the period three months prior to its first identification in Brentwood on 19 February. [155269]

Ms Quin: No suspected cases were reported to the Ministry in the period three months prior to 19 February. The Ministry first became aware of a suspected case of foot and mouth in pigs at an abattoir in Essex on 19 February and subsequently confirmed disease on the evening of 20 February. My right hon. Friend the Minister was informed of these developments on the days they occurred.

Sandra Gidley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of studies published on the effectiveness of disinfectants in destroying the foot and mouth virus. [155159]

Ms Quin [holding answer 23 March 2001]: Only disinfectants approved by MAFF for use against foot and mouth disease can be used for statutory purposes laid down in Foot and Mouth Disease Orders made under the Animal Health Act 1981. These disinfectants have all been tested for efficacy against live foot and mouth disease virus at the Institute for Animal Health, in accordance with a standard test protocol, and have been found to be efficacious at the dilution rates at which they are approved for use.

BEST COPY AVAILABLE

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the possible linkage between cull sows imported from abroad and the current outbreak of foot and mouth; and if he will make a statement. [155303]

Ms Quin [holding answer 23 March 2001]: There is no evidence of such a link at this stage but investigations into the source of the current outbreak are continuing.

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food on what date his Department was first informed of the presence of the foot and mouth virus in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement. [155302]

Ms Quin [holding answer 23 March 2001]: The Ministry first became aware of a suspected case of foot and mouth in pigs at an abattoir in Essex on 19 February and subsequently confirmed the disease on the evening of 20 February.

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the time taken between diagnosing animals as being infected with foot and mouth disease and the taking of effective action. [155076]

Ms Quin [holding answer 26 March 2001]: Our objective is to slaughter infected animals within 24 hours of the disease having been reported. In the majority of areas we are now meeting this target but due to the sheer numbers involved it has not been possible to meet it in all cases.

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of road mats treated with disinfectant as a means of preventing the spread of the virus causing foot and mouth disease; [155074]

(2) what guidance he has issued on the effectiveness of disinfectant mats as a means of preventing the spread of the foot and mouth virus. [155075]

Ms Quin [holding answer 26 March 2001]: Road mats treated with disinfectant provide a limited measure of protection against the spread of the FMD virus as they only apply disinfectant to the tyre treads of vehicles passing over them. The best method of disinfection is the combination of thorough cleansing, preferably with a pressure hose, followed by the use of an approved disinfectant applied to all exposed surfaces using a hose or spray.

The advice to people working or travelling in the countryside contained in Public Information Factsheets and on the MAFF website http://www.maff.gov.uk/ makes it clear that vehicles should be thoroughly cleansed and thoroughly disinfected, and explains that this is best achieved by using a hose or spray to apply disinfectant.

Mr. Livsey: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what measures he has authorised for the control of vermin during the foot and mouth outbreak. [155939]

Ms Quin [holding answer 27 March 2001]: MAFF have a contract with the Farming and Rural Conservation Agency to carry out measures to control vermin on infected premises.

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what Government contingency plan there was for an outbreak of foot and mouth in the United Kingdom; and when it was last revised. [155793]

Ms Quin [holding answer 27 March 2001]: MAFF has contingency plans for dealing with outbreaks of serious animal disease. These include detailed operational instructions for use by the State Veterinary Service. The plan for foot and mouth was updated and submitted to the European Commission in July 2000.

Sir Brian Mawhinney: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food on what date (a) an official and (b) a Minister was first alerted to the (i) possibility of the first suspected case and (ii) confirmation of the first case of foot and mouth disease. [155937]

Ms Quin [holding answer 27 March 2001]: MAFF first became aware of a suspect case of foot and mouth disease on 19 February and of its confirmation on the evening of 20 February. The Minister was so informed on those dates.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received from the retail and wholesale meat trades about the effect on their financial situation of foot and mouth disease; and if he will make a statement on possible temporary relief. [156143]

Ms Quin: We have received a number of representations from various sectors of the meat supply chain. Organisations representing meat wholesalers are currently quantifying the extent of losses resulting from FMD and Government will consider any submission they may subsequently make.

Mr. Webb: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to assist farmers who are running out of fodder who would normally turn out their cattle in April and may be prevented from doing so by movement restrictions. [156218]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 30 March 2001]: A range of options is available to farmers whose stock are short of food, or facing other welfare threats, as a result of FMD movement restrictions. We have produced advisory material on how to safeguard animal welfare in such circumstances; and we have introduced a scheme to license movements both locally, and over longer distances, for welfare reasons. Finally, the livestock welfare (disposal) scheme provides an outlet for those animals that are prevented from moving as normal and are consequently at risk of suffering. Farmers will receive payment for most classes of stock entered to the scheme. Proper care and feeding of livestock remains the responsibility of farmers.

Mr. Fabricant: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the potential impact of the loss of foot and mouth disease-free status on trade in cattle and beef products. [156013]

Ms Quin [holding answer 2 April 2001]: As a result of the present outbreak of foot and mouth disease, UK exports of a range of agricultural products including cattle, beef and beef products have been prohibited. However, the amount of UK beef exported in recent years has been very low as a consequence of BSE. In 2000 some 8,600 tonnes were exported at a value of £24 million. There were no exports of live animals.

Arable Farms Subsidy Scheme

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what changes he forecasts in the subsidy regime affecting arable farmers from 2001 to 2005. [155780]

Ms Quin: Under the Agenda 2000 agreement the cereals regime is due to be reviewed in 2002. In those discussions, which will also cover a number of other sectors, the Government will continue to press their CAP reform agenda, with a view to improving the balance of supply and demand and bringing EU prices closer to world levels.

Herbivore Farm Animals

Mr. Pike: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will ensure that herbivore farm animals are not fed animal by-products; and if he will make a statement. [155965]

Ms Quin: It is already an offence, under the Animal By-Products Order 1999, to feed to ruminants either catering waste containing meat or meat products or unprocessed animal by-products.

Mammalian meat and bone meal may not be fed to any farmed animals. Draft legislation prohibiting the feeding of poultry and fish meal to ruminants had been prepared.

Subsidy Fraud

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how widespread is the practice of moving sheep from farm to farm in order to collect subsidy fraudulently; and if he will make a statement. [156072]

Ms Quin: We are aware of the possibility of such practices occurring and my staff are instructed to look for evidence of this when carrying out on-farm inspections to check sheep subsidy claims.

We have no evidence that such practices are widespread. In England in 2000 we initiated prosecution procedures in two such cases.

Abattoirs

Mr. Webb: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will investigate the prices being paid to farmers by abattoirs; and if he will make it his policy to ensure that abattoirs do not exploit their monopoly position. [156135]

Ms Quin [holding answer 29 March 2001]: The added costs involved in the livestock slaughter scheme currently being absorbed by the abattoir sector are substantial and these have to be taken into account. These costs include the reduction in throughput due to cleaning and disinfection procedures in the lairage, more thorough ante and post mortem inspections for foot and mouth disease and reduced supplies of available livestock. MAFF is now aware that abattoirs are operating as a monopoly but any evidence of this should be reported to the Office of Fair Trading.

Pigfeed

Mr. Steen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he is taking to ensure that meat and bonemeal is not fed to pigs; what enforcement measures exist; and if he will make a statement. [156157]

Ms Quin: In March 1996 the use of mammalian meat and bonemeal (MMBM) was banned in all feed for farmed animals.

Responsibility for enforcement rests with local authorities. In addition, the State Veterinary Service carries out a feed sampling programme, which involves the collection and testing, for the presence of mammalian protein, of 20,000 feed samples a year to ensure compliance.

Beef Imports

Mr. Luff: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the countries from which the import and sale of beef is considered unsafe on animal health grounds; and if he will make a statement. [156382]

Ms Quin [holding answer 30 March 2001]: Specific restrictions on imports of beef from Portugal, France, Netherlands, Republic of Ireland, South Africa, Swaziland and Argentina are currently in place because of the disease situations in those countries. Beef may be imported from other EM member states in accordance with community rules. Beef may only be imported into any EU member state from third countries that have been approved by the European Commission and it must come from approved premises in those countries. Those approved third countries which currently have approved establishments are set out in the table shown. Beef cannot be imported into the UK from any third country which is not on this list.

Agriculture

Mr. Watts: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what level of (a) Government and (b) EU subsidy the agricultural sector received in (a) 1996, (b) 1997, (c) 1998, (d) 1999 and (e) 2000. [156266]

Ms Quin [holding answer 30 March 2001]: The following table sets out (a) total CAP expenditure in the UK, (b) the UK Exchequer funded element of CAP expenditure, and (c) national expenditure on other agricultural grants and subsidies, for the financial years 1996–97 to 2000–01.

£ million

	Total CAP expenditure in the UK	-of which: UK Exchequer funded	Other national expenditure on agricultural grants and subsidies
1996–97	4,203	75	40
1997–98	3,455	91	37
1998–99	3,350	105	26
1999–2000	2,992	139	30
2000–01	3,005	144	34

Note:
The second column of data does not include the UK Exchequer contribution to expenditure on HLCA's (Hill Livestock Compensatory Allowances), although total expenditure on HLCA's is included in the first column.

Flooding

Mr. Ian Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps are being taken to (a) compensate and (b) assist riparian owners for repair and maintenance of river banks and islands for damage caused by flood water. [156437]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 2 April 2001]: The repair and maintenance of watercourses and surrounding land is the responsibility of the riparian owner, though on some rivers such work is undertaken by the relevant flood defence operating authority, that is the Environment Agency, local authority or internal drainage board.

Veterinary Service

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many (a) vets and (b) support staff there were in the veterinary service in (i) 1971, (ii) 1979, (iii) 1997 and (iv) 2001. [156467]

Ms Quin [holding answer 2 April 2001]: The number of veterinary surgeons employed by the State Veterinary Service in 1971 could be identified only at disproportionate cost. The other information sought (full-time equivalents) is as follows:

2001—286[1].

[1] The State Veterinary Service currently employs as permanent staff 286 veterinary surgeons of whom 220 are field veterinary officers.

The numbers of MAFF officials involved in support also could be identified only at disproportionate cost.

Integrated Administration and Control System

Mr. Quentin Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if it is his intention that farmers filing their IACS returns by electronic mail may prevent their names and addresses from being published in commercial directories. [156679]

Ms Quin [holding answer 3 April 2001]: IACS applicants are now able to submit their 2001 IACS forms electronically. This new electronic service from MAFF will deliver much more than a simple e-mail. The forms have built in intelligence, which checks the validity and consistency of the data entered, and calculates totals automatically. There is also an on-line help facility which will guide applicants through completion of the forms. We hope this will make it easier and quicker to complete the forms, and at the same time reduce the scope for making errors.

The electronic IACS service is secure. Applicants will only be able to view their own data, and will submit their forms using their own unique digital signature, which also encrypts the data sent. An acknowledgement that their forms have been submitted successfully will be received electronically within minutes.

Data captured for IACS through this new electronic service are subject to the same requirements for confidentiality as the paper IACS forms and we do not publish or otherwise make these details available to commercial interests.

Hill Farm Allowance

Mr. Stunell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what factors he took into account in changing the minimum land holding for grant qualification by introducing the hill farm allowance. [156865]

Ms Quin: In deciding to increase the minimum area requirement from 3 ha to 10 ha we took account of comments received during public consultation and of an independent evaluation of the previous hill livestock compensatory allowance scheme. This suggested that very small farms are less in need of aid than farms in higher size categories. They are less likely to be full-time farm businesses and have a significantly higher proportion of occupiers with off-farm income.

WALES

National Health Service

6. Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he last met the First Secretary to discuss the NHS in Wales. [155497]

Mr. Hanson: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State and I meet regularly with the National Assembly First Minister and the Assembly Health and Social Services Secretary to discuss the NHS in Wales.

Census

8. Mr. Randall: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what discussions he has had with the Home Secretary and the First Secretary on the census in Wales. [155499]

Mr. Paul Murphy: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State and I have regular meetings with the First Secretary to discuss a range of subjects, including this one. The census in England and Wales is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer and I have therefore had no discussions with the Home Secretary of this issue.

Tourism

9. Mr. Peter Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what recent discussions he has had with the First Secretary with regard to tourism in Wales. [155500]

Mr. Hanson: My right hon. Friend has regular discussions with the First Minister. In light of the current situation with foot and mouth disease, tourism has of course figured prominently in their discussions.

I represent the Wales Office on the Government's rural taskforce, a body on which the Assembly is also represented. As a result of the work of this taskforce, several initiatives have been announced to assist tourism and rural industries more generally where they have been affected by foot and mouth disease.

Foot and Mouth

10. Mr. Edwards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will meet the First Secretary to discuss the outbreak of foot and mouth in Monmouthshire. [155501]

Mr. Paul Murphy: I have regular meetings with my right hon. Friend the First Secretary to discuss a wide range of issues and accompanied him, my hon. Friend for Monmouth (Mr. Edwards) and the Prime Minister to Usk yesterday, where we met representatives of the farming and tourism industries.

20. Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what recent discussions he has had with the First Secretary on the impact of foot and mouth disease on the rural economy in Wales. [155511]

26. Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what recent discussions he has had with the First Secretary about the agriculture and tourism industries in Wales; and if he will make a statement. [155517]

Mr. Paul Murphy: I maintain close contact with my right hon. Friend the First Secretary on a variety of issues including foot and mouth disease and last Sunday we jointly visited areas of Wales affected.

My hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State for Wales is a member of the UK Government rural taskforce set up to examine the effect of the outbreak of foot and mouth disease across the rural economy as a whole. Following the initial meetings of this taskforce, my right hon. Friend the Minister for the Environment announced on 20 March a package of UK wide measures to help businesses cope with the campaign to get the public back to areas of the countryside which they can safely visit and an immediate package of short-term practical help for rural businesses, involving the Small Business Service and the banks. These initiatives are in addition to the £156 million agrimonetary compensation announced by the Government for the sheep, beef and dairy sectors (over the £15 million compulsory agrimonetary aid) and two future years of funding for outgoers under the pig industry restructuring scheme, worth £40 million, which has been made available this year.

In addition, the National Assembly for Wales has already issued a Tourism Charter and announced a £1.5 million marketing package through the Wales Tourist Board aimed at reassuring visitors to Wales. The Assembly has also made available £12 million to local authorities to enable them to grant rate relief to businesses affected by foot and mouth disease, £1 million additional funding to help the agri-food sector in Wales recover from the effects of foot and mouth disease, and £0.5 million to match pound for pound voluntary donations from the public to help relieve rural distress.

24. Mr. Grieve: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what discussions he has had with the Welsh Agriculture Secretary with regard to foot and mouth disease in Wales. [155515]

Mr. Paul Murphy: I have had regular discussions recently with the Welsh Agriculture Secretary with regard to the impact of foot and mouth disease in Wales and last Sunday he and I visited affected areas in Wales with the National Assembly First Secretary.

All efforts are focused on taking action to ensure the disease is contained and eradicated as quickly as possible. The action that is being taken is severe but the best way to beat the outbreak.

25. Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what discussions he has had with the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions with regard to foot and mouth disease in Wales. [155516]

Mr. Paul Murphy: I maintain close contact with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions on a variety of issues.

My hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State for Wales is a member of the UK Government rural taskforce, chaired by the Minister for the Environment, set up to examine the effect of the outbreak of foot and mouth disease across the rural economy as a whole.

27. Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what recent discussions he has had with the Minister for Agriculture about outbreaks of foot and mouth disease in Wales. [155518]

Mr. Paul Murphy: I maintain close contact with my right hon. Friend the Minister for Agriculture in regard to outbreaks of foot and mouth disease in Wales.

Our strategy is still to ensure that all animals on infected farms are culled within 24 hours of report and animals on neighbouring farms culled within 48 hours. All efforts are focused on taking action to ensure the disease is contained and eradicated as quickly as possible. The action that is being taken is severe but the best way to beat the outbreak.

Corus (Redundancies)

11. Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what discussions he has had with the First Secretary concerning estimates of the number of redundancies proposed by Corus in Wales; and if he will make a statement. [155502]

Mr. Paul Murphy: I have met the First Secretary regularly over the past few weeks to discuss issues facing the steel industry in Wales, including the threat of closures and redundancies at Corus plants in Wales.

I welcome the outcome of last week's discussions between Corus and the trade unions. The Government have indicated their willingness to support a scheme of retraining by approaching the European Commission and other member states for their approval.

Trunk Roads

12. Mr. Paterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he last met the First Secretary to discuss trunk roads in Wales. [155503]

Mr. Hanson: Welsh trunk roads are a matter for the National Assembly for Wales, in discussion with the lead Whitehall Department in cases where decisions affect communities on the English/Welsh border.

Although my right hon. Friend has regular discussions with the First Minister on transport issues and I have regular meetings with the National Assembly Minister for the Environment and Transport, we would only become directly involved in trunk road matters if we were asked to intervene to help resolve a difficulty.

Waste Incinerator (Wrexham)

13. Mr. Stephen O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the effect on people living in Cheshire of the proposals for a waste incinerator at Wrexham. [155504]

Mr. Paul Murphy: Any planning proposal is rightly a matter for the relevant local authority. In certain circumstances, such planning applications may be called in by the National Assembly for Wales.

I understand that the public inquiry on this application took evidence from a significant number of individuals and groups on all aspects of the case and that views of Cheshire residents were well represented.

Hospital Waiting Lists

14. Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what recent discussions he has had with the First Secretary with regard to the progress of the Government's policy on reducing hospital waiting lists. [155505]

Mr. Hanson: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State and I meet regularly with the National Assembly First Secretary and the Assembly Health Minister to discuss the NHS in Wales.

Like the Government, the National Assembly is making the reduction of waiting lists a priority but it is for them to decide how they go about it. Significant funding has been allocated for this purpose and last year the Assembly Health Secretary set targets for health authorities to meet.

Welsh Language (Departmental Policy)

15. Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what his policy and practice is on the use of the Welsh language for official purposes within his Department. [155506]

Mr. Paul Murphy: The Wales Office is committed to treating the Welsh and English languages on a basis of equality. Office publications, such as the Departmental Report and Service Delivery Agreement, are already made available in both languages. The office will always reply in Welsh to anyone who writes in Welsh and telephone calls in Welsh are always transferred to a Welsh speaker where available. If no Welsh speaker is available at the time of the call, the call can be returned later by a Welsh speaker.

The Wales Office is committed to doing more to provide a fully bilingual service to the people of Wales, and to that end, the office plans to publish a draft Welsh Language Scheme for consultation during 2001.

New Deal

16. Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what discussions he has had with the Secretary of State for Education and Employment about extending the new deal in Wales. [155507]

Mr. Paul Murphy: I meet regularly with my Cabinet colleagues to discuss a wide range of issues, including the New Deal.

In his Budget statement on 7 March, the Chancellor announced a strengthening of the Government's Welfare to Work Programme through the extension of the already successful New Deal scheme.

The schemes to benefit from this extension will be: New Deal 25+—this will make all over-25s who have been on Jobseekers Allowance for at least 18 months eligible for the New Deal; New Deal for Lone Parents—the extension will potentially help around 50,000 lone parents in Wales; New Deal for Disabled People—which will be extended to all those claiming invalidity benefit.

Pensioners

17. Mr. Donald Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what discussions he has had with pensioners' organisations in Wales about pensions and benefits for the elderly in Wales. [155508]

23. Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what recent discussions he has had with pensioners' organisations in Wales about pension levels and take-up of the Minimum Income Guarantee. [155514]

Mr. Paul Murphy: I met the National Association of Pensioners in Wales on 7 June last year to discuss pensions, and my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State met members of the Age Concern focus groups recently to discuss a range of issues affecting older people in Wales.

This Government are committed to delivering real improvements to ensure that pensioners have a decent and secure income in retirement.

My right hon. Friend the Chancellor announced measures in the Budget that will improve benefits to pensioners and help tackle pensioner poverty.

The basic State pension is rising by £5 per week to £72.50 for a single person and £8 per week to £115.90 for a couple helping all 630,000 pensioners in the region.

The Minimum Income Guarantee, putting a floor under pensioners incomes, is rising to £92 for a single pensioner and £140.55 for couples. This will increase again in April 2003, and will help tackle pensioner poverty in 105,000 pensioner households in Wales. 10,000 more pensioners in Wales will be eligible, and benefits for the 95,000 pensioners currently eligible will be increased.

An increase in age related income tax allowances for pensioners by £240 over and above inflation from April 2003 will benefit half of all pensioner households in Wales: 165,000 households.

Other measures for all pensioners, and particularly help for the poorest, includes the free eye tests, Winter Fuel Payments and the reduction in VAT on fuel to 5 per cent.

SMEs

18. Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what recent discussions he has had with the First Secretary about small and medium-sized businesses in Wales. [155509]

Mr. Paul Murphy: I regularly meet the First Secretary and discuss a range of issues.

The Chancellor's Budget announced on 7 March 2001 a package of measures such as help to manage SMEs entry into the VAT system, reduce burdens and improve their cash flow, which will benefit many of the 140,000 SMEs in Wales.

Additionally, the Small Business Council is currently holding events in town halls across the UK with the aim of listening to business and its concerns.

European Funding

19. Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he intends to meet the chief executive of the Wales European Funding Office to discuss the implementation of Objective 1 programmes. [155510]

Mr. Paul Murphy: I last met with John Clark, the Chief Executive of the Wales European Funding Office, on 29 January 2001. I was pleased to learn that WEFO are making good progress in implementing Objective 1 in Wales and that utilisation of the programme has been achieved faster in Wales than anywhere else in the UK. Importantly, this has been achieved in Wales through a partnership between private, public and voluntary sectors.

A total of 190 projects have been approved so far under the Objective 1 programme, with Structural Funds support of £146.1 million.

Schools Funding

21. Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what recent discussions he has had with the First Secretary of the National Assembly about direct payments to head teachers in Wales, as announced in the Budget. [155512]

Mr. Paul Murphy: I meet the First Secretary on a regular basis and we discuss a range of issues.

My hon. Friend and I are very pleased that Wales will receive an additional £100 million over the next three years as a result of the Budget's additional spending on key public services. It will of course be for the Assembly to allocate the funds according to its own priorities.

Manufacturing Industry

22. Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what discussions he has had with the First Secretary on proposals to assist redundant manufacturing workers. [155513]

Mr. Paul Murphy: I meet the First Secretary regularly and discuss a wide range of issues including manufacturing.

The Prime Minister confirmed on 14 March that areas that have been affected by large scale redundancies will be helped by a job transition service (JTS). This JTS will focus on matching skills of those made jobless to the jobs offered in the changing economy.

In addition, areas affected by steel and other significant job losses currently have access to an on-site jobshop to offer help with all aspects of job search, training and benefits advice, staffed by the Employment Service Rapid Response Unit.

Welsh Language

28. Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what advice and assistance his Department gives to EU applicant countries within whose boundaries there are linguistic minorities, about his programmes to protect and promote Welsh; and if he will make a statement. [155519]

Mr. Paul Murphy: The UK Government are always ready to consider sympathetically requests for assistance from applicant countries. So far, my Department has not received any requests for advice in respect of the position of minority languages. Should we do so, I would be very happy to share our experience of Welsh language policy.

TREASURY

Ministerial Visits (Peterborough)

Sir Brian Mawhinney: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the Ministers in his Department who visited any of the constituencies which are in the Peterborough unitary authority area between 1 January 2000 and 14 February 2001, indicating in each case (a) the date of the visit, (b) the constituencies included in the visit and (c) if the local hon. Member met the Minister. [151035]

Mr. Timms [holding answer 26 February 2001]: I visited Peterborough on 22 January 2001. During the course of my visit I met the hon. Member for Peterborough, (Mrs. Brinton). There were no other visits to the area during this period by Treasury Ministers on Government business.

CABINET OFFICE

Civil Service Salaries

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what the average percentage increase in the salaries of members of the Senior Civil Service is in the current financial year. [156726]

Mr. Ian McCartney: The average individual award from 1 April 2000 was 4.8 per cent. Figures for April 2001 are not yet available.

People's Panel Support Group

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office when the People's Panel Support Group last met. [156728]

Mr. Ian McCartney: The People's Panel Support Group last met on 16 June 2000. A meeting scheduled for 17 October 2000 had to be cancelled when key members of the group were unable to attend.

A full evaluation of the people's panel is under way. Further meetings of the support group are planned for when its results are available.

Important reports from the panel over the last 12 months include research into putting consumers at the heart of public services, attitudes to public services in deprived areas, public services and ethnic minorities and extended opening hours.

Departmental Policies (Blackpool, South)

Mr. Gordon Marsden: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office if she will set out, including statistical information relating as directly as possible to the constituency, the effect on the Blackpool, South constituency of her Department's policies and actions since 2 May 1997. [142232]

Mr. Stringer: The Cabinet Office is responsible for a range of functions which cover England as a whole, or in relation to non-devolved matters, Great Britain or the United Kingdom. It is therefore not possible to say what their specific impact is on a particular constituency. Additionally, any policy changes arising from reports from Cabinet Office units, such as the Social Exclusion Unit and the United Kingdom Anti-Drugs Co-ordination Unit, are implemented by the appropriate Government Department rather than by the unit itself.

HEALTH

BSE (France)

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on research conducted by Dr. Christl Donnelly on the incidence of BSE in France. [144334]

Ms Stuart: We welcome the research by Dr. Donnelly, of Imperial College, London, which was published in Nature on 14 December. It is important that decisions on food safety are based on sound science.

Dr. Donnelly's research showed that, if the United Kingdom's ban on the sale for human consumption of beef from animals aged over 30 months at time of slaughter is enforced, and if the French Government's controls on cattle feed have eliminated the feed-borne transmission of BSE to French cattle born after mid-1996, there is virtually no risk from French beef consumed in the UK.

The research found that even if enforcement was only 75 per cent., the risk from French beef would be comparable to that from UK beef.

OTM Beef

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to the statement by the Minister of State, Ministry of Agriculture Fisheries and Food, the right hon. Member for Gateshead, East and Washington, West (Ms Quin) of 21 December 2000, Official Report, column 558, if he will publish the evidence on which the Minister based her claim that over-30-month beef is not used in processed products sold in Britain. [146430]

Ms Stuart [holding answer 22 January 2001]: My right hon. Friend did not claim that, but referred to signs from manufacturers and retailers that they were using beef from cattle that were not over 30-months-old at slaughter. This information had been obtained by the Food Standards Agency and by local authorities in connection with increased enforcement checks on compliance with the generally applicable ban on the sale for human consumption of beef from cattle aged over-30-months at slaughter (the OTM rule). The Meat Hygiene Service and local authorities were required to carry out those checks by the FSA from last November. High levels of compliance were found and some companies changed their procurement arrangements to ensure that appropriate supplier documentation confirmed compliance with the OTM rule.

Broiler Chickens

Mr. Etherington: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many broiler chickens slaughtered in the United Kingdom were rejected as unfit for human consumption in 1999. [150184]

Ms Stuart: I am informed by the Food Standards Agency that responsibility for the enforcement of meat hygiene legislation in licensed poultry slaughterhouses in Great Britain rests with the Meat Hygiene Service (MHS), and in Northern Ireland with the Department of Agriculture and Rural Development.

Information relating to Great Britain is not available in the form requested as MHS data are based on cause of condemnation rather than whether the carcase was partially or fully condemned. However, it is estimated that in 1999, approximately 6.6 million whole carcases from poultry weighing under 2kg (a category that includes broiler chickens, cast hens and other poultry) were condemned as unfit for human consumption post-slaughter. This represents approximately 1 per cent. of the total throughput of poultry weighing under 2kg slaughtered in Great Britain during that period.

In Northern Ireland, 62.3 million broiler chickens were slaughtered during 1999, of which 0.6 million were subsequently rejected as unfit for human consumption.

Correspondence

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when his Department first contacted the hon. Member for Manchester, Central concerning his letter of 3 August 2000 regarding catering services for Manchester Central Healthcare Trust; and if he will make a statement. [150134]

Ms Stuart [holding answer 13 February 2001]: A reply to my hon. Friend's letter of the 3 August was sent on 29 March 2001. A letter from the Department's Permanent Secretary/Chief Executive was also enclosed apologising for the unacceptable delay.

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects to respond to the letters from Mr. D. Wardell of Woodmancote, Gloucester, dated 30 November 2000 and 31 December 2000, on the subject of the use of mobile phones. [151362]

Ms Stuart [holding answer 26 February 2001]: A reply was sent direct to Mr. Wardell on the 6 March 2001. As both letters were relating to the same issue, one reply was sent to cover the two letters.

Cancer Treatment (Battersea)

Mr. Linton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action the Government have taken to improve accessibility to cancer treatments for patients in Battersea. [151153]

Yvette Cooper: The local primary care group is working actively to improve diagnosis of cancer and improve screening rates. Battersea residents will benefit from our plan to reduce cancer waiting times through the creation of clinical networks and through investment in better equipment.

New Cancer Equipment

St. George's—one breast screening trailer (£69,000), six pieces of mammography equipment (£250,000).

St. Thomas—one magnetic resonance imaging (MRI) scanner (£851,000), two linear accelerators (£1.3 million).

Royal Marsden—one MRI scanner (£815,000), two linear accelerators (£1.3 million).

Ambulance Staff

Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to provide driver 2 training under blue lights for ambulance operational staff. [155787]

Ms Stuart: It is the responsibility of each ambulance trust to ensure that all staff who drive emergency vehicles are competent to do so. These staff must successfully complete a nationally recognised training course and should gain supervised driving experience under blue light conditions, before commencing full front-line duties.

The Driving Standards Agency (DSA) is currently looking at the core competencies required for driving various kinds of emergency vehicles under blue light conditions. Any changes recommended by the DSA will be incorporated into the ambulance driver-training programme.

Opinion Polling

Mr. St. Aubyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what (a) quantitative and (b) qualitative analytical work his Department has commissioned from GGC/NOP since 1 May 1997; and what was (i) the cost of the contract and (ii) the specific nature of the work commissioned. [155664]

Ms Stuart [holding answer 28 March 2001]: The table shows quantitative and qualitative analytical work commissioned direct by my Department and via the Central Office of Information from GGC/NOP since 1 May 1997.

We are committed to consulting and involving the public to help inform both policy formulation and the delivery of a better quality public service. Responsive public services are an important part of the modernising government initiative.

We conduct or commission market or opinion research only when it is justified by the needs of the policy or programme and is the most economical, efficient and effective way to achieve the purpose.

Nursing Care (Shropshire)

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people will benefit from the planned free nursing care in nursing homes in Shrewsbury and Atcham; and if he will make a statement. [156496]

Mr. Hutton: An estimated 220 people will benefit from the planned free nursing care in nursing homes in Shrewsbury and Atcham[1]. The Health and Social Care Bill, which has now cleared the House of Lord's Committee stage, will ensure that in future everyone who needs care from a registered nurse will have it paid for by the national health service.

Food Supplements

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what steps his Department has taken to ensure continued free access to food supplements; and if he will make a statement; [156693]

(2) what his policy is on the proposed EU food supplement directive; and if he will make a statement; [156690]

(3) what assessment he has made of differing regulatory structures present in the European food supplements market; and what assessment he has made of the level of restriction imposed in EU member states; [156692]

(4) what action his Department has taken to re-evaluate the current regulatory structure relating to food supplements; and what steps his Department has taken to ensure the proper communication to the consumer of the health benefits of food products; [156695]

(5) what recent representations he has received relating to the proposed EU food supplement directive and its impact on the free access to food supplements; [156688]

(6) what steps he has taken to maintain safety as the basis for free access to food supplements, regulated under food law; [156694]

(7) if he will make a statement on his Department's approach to the harmonisation of the food supplement market; and on what basis of definition harmonisation is to be achieved. [156691]

Ms Stuart: We accept there is a need for European Union rules on food supplements to tackle trade problems. This is because member states have a range of regulatory systems, with differing requirements. Generally these are more restrictive than the United Kingdom's safety based approach. We are pressing for a safety based approach to regulation of these products at EU level, in the interests of maintaining consumer choice.

The Food Standards Agency (FSA), which is representing the Government in negotiations for harmonised EU legislation on food supplements, has consulted interested parties on the effects of the Commission's proposal. Representations have been received from consumer organisations, individuals, nutrition therapists and professional public health groups, food supplement manufacturers and their trade associations, retailers and enforcement bodies. All these groups support our view that the market should be open to products which are safe and properly labelled. A number of consultees have pointed out that the proposed legislation could significantly restrict the range of vitamin and mineral substances which could be used in food supplements, and the availability of high dose supplements. We are pressing for amendments to the draft directive to take into account the wide range of safe products available in the UK.

Clear, accurate labelling is essential to help consumers make informed choices. The FSA is pressing for a number of improvements to EU food labelling rules. These include mandatory, easy to use nutrition labelling and an effective and practical system for the verification and approval of health claims at EU level. The agency is also calling for the arrangements for health claims to allow the use of disease risk reduction claims where they are valid and presented in an appropriate context.

Medicinal Products

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the proposed EU Directive for traditionally used medicinal products; and what representations he has received on the matter. [156689]

Ms Stuart: A letter dated 18 December 2000 from the Medicines Control Agency (MCA) to the European Commission (EC) set out the United Kingdom's comments on the preliminary draft of the directive on traditional medicinal products. The MCA has recently received from the EC a second draft of the directive, due to be discussed at the meeting of the European Pharmaceutical Committee on 5 April. Copies of both documents have been placed in the Library. Representations on the directive have been received mainly during the regular dialogue the MCA holds with representatives of herbal interest groups. These constructive discussions have covered most aspects of the directive, including the possible criteria for assessing traditional use, the position of non European herbal traditions, and aspects of safety, quality and information to the consumer.

Oxted and Limpsfield War Memorial Hospital

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to defer possible sale of land at Oxted and Limpsfield war memorial hospital until the outcome of the present inquiry by the ombudsman is known. [156665]

Ms Stuart [holding answer 2 April 2001]: Surrey and Sussex Healthcare National Health Service trust will not consider the sale until after the outcome of the ombudsman's inquiry is known and the full business case has been considered by the south-east regional office of the NHS Executive.

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what measures he is taking to ensure the physical security of Oxted and Limpsfield war memorial hospital. [156663]

Ms Stuart [holding answer 2 April 2001]: The physical security of the Oxted and Limpsfield war memorial hospital is the responsibility of the Surrey and Sussex Healthcare National Health Service trust. The trust is in the process of implementing a number of measures which are aimed at ensuring the external and internal security of the hospital and these should be completed by 6 April 2001.

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he intends to reply to the letters of 7 February and 21 March regarding Oxted and Limpsfield war memorial hospital from the hon. Member for East Surrey. [156664]

Ms Stuart [holding answer 2 April 2001]: A reply to the hon. Member's letter of 7 February was sent on 27 March 2001. The letter dated 21 March 2001 was received by the Department on 27 March 2001. The issues raised are currently being considered with a view to a reply being dispatched within the Department's service first target of reply to all correspondence within 20 days.

National Alcohol Strategy

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he will publish the national alcohol strategy. [156875]

Ms Stuart: We remain committed to the publication of a cross-government strategy to tackle alcohol misuse, and we are working with key stakeholders across government, the alcohol field and the alcohol industry to ensure that this commitment is delivered.

The NHS Plan, published in July 2000, said that the Department would be implementing the strategy by 2004. The Department expects to publish a consultation paper in due course.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps the Government are taking with regard to the advertising of alcoholic drinks targeted at those under 18; and if he will make a statement on the arrangements for self-regulation in the alcoholic drinks industry. [156874]

Ms Stuart: The Government and the drinks industry are concerned about advertisements for alcohol drinks which are targeted specifically at people under the age of 18. There are voluntary codes of practice drawn up by the drinks industry, the Advertising Standards Association and other media organisations which ban advertising aimed at children and younger people.

TREASURY

IR35

Dr. Cable: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the additional costs of benefit entitlements by contractors deemed to be employees under IR35. [157110]

Dawn Primarolo: IR35 does not affect the employment rights of any worker employed through a personal service company in any way.

Dr. Cable: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what revisions he plans to make to the Inland Revenue rules consequent upon the judgment of the IR35 case. [157099]

Dawn Primarolo: The court dismissed the challenge to the legislation on service provision by intermediaries. The Inland Revenue will review the guidance material used by its staff regarding the interpretation of the law.

Foster Carers

Dr. Cable: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what response the Inland Revenue has made to the representations from foster carers' organisations and the Department of Health regarding its proposals for taxing payments to foster carers. [157067]

Dawn Primarolo: The Inland Revenue is working with the Department of Health and a number of organisations representing foster carers to design a simple method by which foster carers can choose to calculate the income tax due on the reward element of their payments using standard, agreed, costs. Alternatively, foster carers would be able to rely upon actual costs. The Inland Revenue plans to introduce the new arrangements as soon as practicable. In the interim, the Inland Revenue will maintain existing agreements for calculating the reward element of payments, in accordance with representations made by care organisations.

Foot and Mouth

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the (a) maximum and (b) minimum total cost to public funds of the foot and mouth outbreak. [157007]

Mr. Andrew Smith: The Treasury, MAFF and other interested Departments are keeping a range of possible outcomes under review. At this stage it is not possible to estimate the final cost of the outbreak with any reliability.

Customs and Excise

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many people were employed (a) full-time and (b) part-time with HM Customs and Excise in (i) Scotland and (ii) the UK in 1999–2000 and 2000–01. [155305]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 23 March 2001]: Staff in post figures for Customs and Excise are published in the Cabinet Office's "Civil Service Staff in Post" summaries, copies of which are in the Library.

In 1999–2000 there were an average of 1,322 full-time and 80 part-time staff employed in Scotland by HM Customs and Excise. The equivalent figures for the UK were 21,522 full-time and 2,029 part-time.

For 2000–01, Scotland had an average of 1,206 full-time and 87 part-time staff. In the UK as a whole 20,965 full-time and 2,133 part-time staff were employed.

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many (a) personal computers, (b) printers, (c) fax machines, (d) servers and (e) vehicles were based in HM Customs and Excise in (i) Scotland and (ii) the UK in the years 1999–2000 and 2000–01. [155306]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 23 March 2001]: The information is as follows:

Dawn Primarolo: The information in the form requested is not available for previous years.

Currently (April 2000), there are approximately 2,113 Customs and Excise staff working in British airports and 2,109 staff working in British ports.

However, many staff working in customs and anti-smuggling areas are not based at a port or airport, or in the UK. They are excluded from the figures.

Working Families Tax Credit

Mr. Field: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what data he collects on the income distribution of recipients of the Working Families Tax Credit with incomes over £250 per week. [157048]

Dawn Primarolo: The Working Families Tax Credit (WFTC) application form requires applicants to report their earnings, and those of their partner (if any). Statistical analyses of WFTC awards are based on a 5 per cent. sample of awards in Great Britain. Subject to sampling error, this sample can be used to generate information on the number of WFTC recipients according to bands of gross weekly earnings of the main earner.

Mr. Field: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) with respect to Table 5.3 of the Working Families Tax Credit Statistics, Quarterly Inquiry, August 2000, what assessment he has made of the factors underlying the average tax credit awards payable to (a) managers and administrators and (b) taxi drivers; [156833]

(2) if he will list for Table 5.3 of the Working Families Tax Credit Statistics, Quarterly Inquiry, August 2000, the average incomes for each occupation type who are in receipt of tax credits. [156832]

Dawn Primarolo: The table shows the average gross weekly earnings of the main earner in families receiving Working Families Tax Credit at August 2000 and who fall into each of the occupation types listed in the table referred to.

The average gross weekly earnings of main earners who are managers and administrators and included in the table is higher than the overall average, and the average gross weekly earnings of main earners who are taxi drivers is lower.

Fiscal Intervention

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Rochford and Southend, East (Sir T. Taylor) of 7 December 2000, Official Report, column 2W, on fiscal intervention, what the average price per ounce was of gold at each phase of the gold sell-off; what quantity was sold at each phase; and what quantity of euros were bought. [157028]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The results of the 11 bimonthly gold auctions held since July 1999, including the allotment price per ounce and the amount of gold allotted, are published in Bank of England Press Notices issued on the day of each auction. Copies of the Press Notices have been placed in the House of Commons Library and can be found on the Bank of England's website (www.bankofengland.co.uk).

E-Commerce

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what EU legislation is planned in respect of (a) distance marketing of financial services and (b) the application of VAT to electronic commerce. [157399]

Miss Melanie Johnson: A proposal from the European Commission for a directive on distance marketing of financial services is currently under discussion in the Council. A proposal from the European Commission to change the VAT rules relating to certain e-commerce supplies is also currently under discussion by member states.

Departmental Policies (Eccles)

Mr. Ian Stewart: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will set out, including statistical information relating as directly as possible to the Eccles constituency, the effects on Eccles of his Department's policies and actions since 2 May 1997. [157287]

Miss Melanie Johnson: Eccles, along with the rest of the United Kingdom, is benefiting from the long-term action we have taken to build economic stability and secure and stable levels of growth and employment. Since the General Election, claimant unemployment in the constituency has fallen by 812, or 36 per cent., youth unemployment is down by 78 per cent., and long-term unemployment has fallen by 78 per cent.

Macroeconomic stability is being complemented at the microeconomic level by the Government's policies to ease the transition from welfare to work and to make work pay. To the end of January 2001, the New Deal for 18 to 24-year-olds had helped 843 young people in Eccles constituency gain valuable skills and experience—419 (50 per cent.) of whom had moved into employment. The Working Families Tax Credit (WFTC), introduced in October 1999, is helping to make work pay for low and middle income families. In August 2000, 2,800 families in the constituency were benefiting from WFTC.

The Government are also committed to policies that enable pensioners to share in the country's rising prosperity. All pensioners, including 17,500 in Eccles, are receiving an above-inflation increase in the basic state pension from April 2001. Single pensioners receive an extra £5 a week, and couples receive an extra £8 a week. All pensioners aged 75 or over have also been entitled to a free TV licence since November 2000—including around 7,500 in Eccles.

Departmental Policies (Amber Valley)

Judy Mallaber: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will set out, with statistical information relating as directly as possible to the Amber Valley constituency, the effects on Amber Valley of his Department's policies and actions since 2 May 1997. [157130]

Miss Melanie Johnson: Amber Valley, along with the rest of the United Kingdom, is benefiting from the long-term action we have taken to build economic stability and secure high and stable levels of growth and employment. Since the general election, claimant unemployment in the constituency has fallen by 516, or 25 per cent., youth unemployment is down by 87 per cent., and long-term unemployment has fallen by 60 per cent.

Macroeconomic stability is being complemented at the microeconomic level by the Government's policies to ease the transition from welfare into work and to make work pay. To the end of January 2001, the New Deal for 18 to 24-year-olds had helped 789 young people in Amber Valley constituency gain valuable skills and experience—406 (51 per cent.) of whom had moved into employment. The Working Families Tax Credit (WFTC), introduced in October 1999, is helping to make work pay for low and middle income families. In August 2000, 2,200 families in the constituency were benefiting from WFTC.

The Government are also committed to policies that enable pensioners to share in the country's rising prosperity. All pensioners, including 17,100 in Amber Valley, are receiving an above-inflation increase in the basic State Pension from April 2001. Single pensioners receive an extra £5 a week, and couples receive an extra £8 a week. All pensioners aged 75 or over have also been entitled to a free TV licence since November 2000—including around 7,500 in Amber Valley.

VAT Fraud

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the cost to his Department in each year since 1997 of complex VAT fraud; and if he will make a statement. [156899]

Dawn Primarolo: No such estimate is available, relating specifically to the costs to Customs and Excise of complex VAT fraud in each year since 1997.

Financial Services Act

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many contraventions of (a) section 3 and (b) section 47 of the Financial Services Act 1986 have been referred to the (i) police and (ii) High Court since April 1998. [154997]

Miss Melanie Johnson [holding answer 22 March 2001]: The information requested is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Asbestos-related Diseases

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what decisions were made at the meeting of the Policyholders Protection Board on 21 March which will have implications for sufferers of asbestos-related diseases. [156478]

Miss Melanie Johnson: [holding answer 3 April 2001]: I understand that the board has been working very closely with the run-off management of Chester Street Insurance Holdings Limited, and subsequently with the scheme administrators. I am informed that, at its meeting on 21 March, the board decided that payments should be made as soon as possible to Chester Street policyholders whose eligibility for protection under the Policyholders Protection Act 1975 is established.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Digital Television

Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he expects to receive the Office of Fair Trading's report into BSkyB; and what his Department's policy is on promoting choice and competition within the digital television market. [R] [157041]

Dr. Howells: The Office of Fair Trading inquiry into the activities of BSkyB was made under the Competition Act 1998. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry will not therefore receive a formal report at the end of the process. The Director-General of Fair Trading will, however, keep my right hon. Friend informed of key developments. The Director-General expects to reach a view on whether or not an infringement decision should be issued against BSkyB by this summer.

The Department of Trade and Industry supports choice and competition within the digital television market by supporting the development of all three digital platforms; cable, satellite and terrestrial.

Aiwa Factory, Newbridge

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what representations he has received on the prospect of job losses at the Aiwa factory in Newbridge in Wales; [156576]

(2) what representations he has received from the owners of Aiwa on the prospect of job losses at the Aiwa factory in Newbridge in Wales. [156578]

Ms Hewitt [holding answer 2 April 2001]: I have not received any representations in respect of the prospect of job losses at the Aiwa factory in Newbridge in Wales.

With the transfer of devolved powers to the National Assembly for Wales, such representations would be referred to it.

I understand that the company has issued a press statement rebutting the press reports of possible job losses at Newbridge.

Partnerships

Mr. Goggins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he plans to consult on the removal of the 20 partner limit on partnerships. [157149]

Mr. Byers: I am pleased to announce to the House that I have today published a consultation document proposing the removal of the 20 partner limit on partnerships.

Consultation on the abolition of the limit on the number of partners allowed in a partnership was announced as one of the Government's measures to reduce the red-tape on business by means of a Regulatory Reform Order. The removal of the 20 partner limit is a deregulatory measure that will ease the administrative burdens on larger partnerships that wish to expand.

Copies of the consultation document have been placed in the Libraries of the House.

Marks and Spencer Call Centre (Warrington)

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps he is taking to assist staff affected by the proposed closure of the Marks and Spence Call Centre and Fulfilment operations in Warrington; and if he will make a statement. [156983]

Ms Hewitt: The Northwest Development Agency has met the local management team at Marks and Spencers in Warrington and discussed possible assistance, including access to the Rapid Response Fund. DEFENCE

Defence Medical Services

Ms Rosie Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about the pay of medical and dental officers in the armed forces. [157531]

Mr. Hoon: The Supplement to the 2001 Report of the Armed Forces' Pay Review Body making recommendations on the pay of Service medical and dental officers has been published today. Copies of the Supplement are available in the Vote Office and the Library of the House. I wish to express my thanks to the Chairman and members of the Review Body for their work in producing this Supplement.

In line with the increase recommended by the Doctors' and Dentists' Review Body, the Review Body recommends an overall pay increase for Defence Medical Services medical and dental officers of 3.9 per cent. The Review Body also recommends a 6.2 per cent. increase for certain categories of junior doctors and a 4.2 per cent. increase for general medical practitioners, inclusive of the overall 3.9 per cent. increase. In addition, there are recommendations for additional payments to general medical and general dental practitioners' pay scales.

The additional cost to the Defence Budget will be £4.5 million. This will be met within existing departmental expenditure limits.

The Review Body's recommendations are to be accepted in full, with implementation effective from 1 April 2001.

Defence Evaluation and Research Agency

Mr. Duncan Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence in what circumstances his Department will be reimbursed by the Treasury in the event of (a) a delay in and (b) cancellation of the New DERA flotation. [154164]

Mr. Hoon [holding answer 16 March 2001]: The Ministry of Defence will receive a credit to the Defence Budget of at least £250 million in financial year 2001–02 in respect of the Public Private Partnership for DERA. This does not depend on whether the transaction has taken place, nor does the amount give an indication of the likely value of New DERA.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Incinerators

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) how many dioxin tests have been conducted on (a) Byker employees and (b) employees working at other incineration plants since 1979; and if he will place the results in the Library; [155383]

(2) how many dioxin tests have been conducted on employees working on the demolition of incineration plants since 1979; and if he will place the results in the Library; [155384]

(3) if he will list the studies carried out into health of employees who have worked at the Byker incinerator; [155380]

(4) if he will place in the Library a copy of the advice given to Byker employees covering the health effects of working with incinerators. [155385]

Mr. Meacher [holding answer 23 March 2001]: The Health and Safety Executive (HSE) has not received any requests from Byker employees or trade unions for advice on the potential health effects of working with incinerators or for requests for studies into the health of employees. HSE considers that the Environment Agency's current legislation is such that the potential exposure of employees to dioxins is very low.

Exposure to dioxins (both environmental and workplace) can be measured using blood tests. Blood tests are invasive and are not normally carried out unless there is a clear need or concern expressed by those involved. They are also time consuming and expensive. Under these circumstances, they are unlikely to yield useful information. Consequently HSE has not carried out dioxin tests on employees at incinerator plants or those involved in the demolition of these plants and does not believe that random blood tests are necessary.

The only health effects from dioxins which could be detected by health checks is the skin condition, chloracne. This only occurs at high exposures, for example as a result of industrial accidents, and consequently checks for this condition would not be of value at exposure levels associated with incinerators.

In the absence of investigations due to accidents, reports of ill health and complaints, HSE's inspectorates carry out its elective work guided by priorities. In 1995 HSE's inspectorate rated the health risks at the Byker plant as 'medium' and on reassessment in 1999 and 2000 as 'low'. The assessment included examination of the general standards of ventilation and cleanliness etc. at this medium-sized plant which employs approximately 20 people. These ratings did not indicate a need proactively to supply information to Byker employees or trade unions on the potential health effects of working with incinerators.

Foot and Mouth

Mr. Norman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if the burial sites (a) in use and (b) being constructed for the purpose of burying the carcases of animals in connection with the prevention of foot and mouth disease comply with (i) the provisions regarding the protection of groundwater in the EU Groundwater Directive of 1978 and (ii) the provisions of the EU directive on the landfill of waste of April 1999 concerning arrangements for the protection of soil and water via leachate collection and bottom sealing. [156820]

Mr. Meacher: The Government are aware of the need to comply with all relevant EU Directives during the current foot and mouth outbreak. The principal Directive concerning animal burial is the Animal Waste Directive (90/667/EEC), Article 3(2) of which contains requirements for environmental protection. These requirements are met through close co-operation between this Department, MAFF and the Environment Agency, and through the authorisation procedure in the Groundwater Directive. The Agency continues to carry out an assessment of both existing and proposed burial sites and, subject to the risk, authorises the burial imposing any necessary conditions for the protection of groundwater.

London Underground Strike

Mr. Robathan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what representations he has received from the RMT on the London Underground strike; and if he will make a statement. [156777]

Mr. Hill: I have received no direct representations from the RMT about the Underground strike, which is an operational matter for London Underground.

The Government regret the disruption which Underground passengers will have suffered. The recent strikes have brought unnecessary inconvenience to London. This is not a dispute about safety, which will continue to be overseen by the independent Health and Safety Executive.

Ministerial Discussions

Mr. Robathan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what discussions he has had with the RMT on transport issues in the last year. [156778]

Mr. Hill: Ministers have extensive dealings with organisations in both the public and private sectors as part of their official duties, which have included some meetings with the RMT.

It would be impracticable to maintain a central record of such meetings.

Genetically Modified Organisms

Joan Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many (a) inspectors and (b) inspector hours per year were devoted to inspecting experimental releases of genetically modified organisms in (i) 1996, (ii) 1997, (iii) 1998, (iv) 1999 and (v) 2000 to ensure consent conditions were complied with; how many breaches of consents were detected in these years; and how many resulted in prosecutions. [156463]

Mr. Meacher [holding answer 2 April 2001]: The information is given in the table. Figures exclude Scotland from 1 April 2000 as the Scottish Executive have had independent inspection arrangements since then. The Central Science Laboratory (CSL) took over responsibility from HSE for inspections in England and Wales on 1 June 2000.

[3] The figures reported for 1997 and 1998 show the instances where in the opinion of the HSE inspector releases were not being carried out in accordance with the release consents. Details were provided in my replies of 17 December 1998, Official Report, column 630W, and 4 February 1999, Official Report, column 720W, to the hon. Member for Lewes (Mr. Baker). Two cases resulted in prosecutions.

The breach of consent in 2000 was reported by Aventis at two of its small-scale research and development trial sites of GM sugar beet (consent reference 00/R33/02). This consent authorised the release of sugar beet plants genetically modified for tolerance to glufosinate herbicide. At the end of the trials approximately 0.5 per cent. of the plants were found to be of a GM line that was also tolerant to the herbicide glyphosate and were not covered by the consent. CSL investigated this matter to ensure that volunteer GM beet plants were controlled and that measures are in place to prevent a recurrence. The Advisory Committee on Releases to the Environment was informed and concluded that there was no increased risk to human health or the environment. Aventis will be required to conduct additional monitoring of the affected sites in 2001.

Green Ministers Committee

Mrs. Brinton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what targets were agreed at the meeting on 19 March of the Green Ministers Committee for (a) the purchase of renewable energy by Departments and (b) the reduction of water consumption by the Government estate. [156905]

Mr. Meacher: The Green Ministers Committee agreed in principle a target to purchase renewable electricity, the details of which would be pursued through ministerial correspondence. We also agreed the following water targets:

For offices in metered buildings where the Department is sole occupier or is billed the water services charges: all Departments should achieve a maximum level of water consumption equivalent to 11 cubic metres per person (full-time equivalent staff) by 31 March 2002, and a further 30 per cent. reduction over the next two years, achieving a level of 7.7 cubic metres by 31 March 2004.

For other metered buildings (e.g. laboratories, law courts and depots) where the Department is sole occupier or is billed the water services charges: all Departments should establish benchmarks under the Watermark Project for main categories of non-office buildings by 31 October 2001 with the aim of setting percentage targets for achieving initial reductions in Departments' water use within the following year (by 31 March 2002).

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Children and Family Court Advisory and Support Service

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how the Children and Family Court Advisory and Support Service will demonstrate its ability to comply with health and safety legislation after its inauguration on 1 April. [156998]

Jane Kennedy: The Children and Family Court Advisory and Support Service (CAFCASS) is devising a health and safety policy. In the interim, CAFCASS has adopted the inherited health and safety policies and procedures.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department when the regional managers for England and Wales will be appointed to the Children and Family Court Advisory and Support Service. [156997]

Jane Kennedy: All area manager appointments to the Children and Family Court Advisory and Support Service (CAFCASS) structure have been made and six of the 10 are now in post. Interim arrangements for the remaining four areas are in place with acting area managers in post.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how the Children and Family Court Advisory and Support Service will be represented on area child protection committees. [156999]

Jane Kennedy: The Department of Health will be issuing a letter to the Chairs of Area Child Protection Committees requiring the inclusion of CAFCASS in the core membership of Area Child Protection Committees. CAFCASS will ask the National Assembly for Wales to make a similar requirement.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how local child protection procedures will cover Children and Family Court Advisory and Support Service employees. [157000]

Jane Kennedy: All Children and Family Court Advisory and Support Service (CAFCASS) staff will be expected to work to local area child protection procedures, as did the predecessor agencies. Core membership of Area Child Protection Committees will reinforce this requirement.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department when formal employer and trade union negotiating structures will be in place (a) nationally and (b) locally for the Children and Family Court Advisory and Support Service. [157001]

Jane Kennedy: The Children and Family Court Advisory and Support Service (CAFCASS) recognises the value to the service of a good working relationship with trade unions. CAFCASS, which was established on 1 April 2001, met with trade union representatives on 4 April 2001. CAFCASS wants to develop a robust consultation and negotiating mechanism as quickly as possible.

PRIME MINISTER

Foot and Mouth

Mr. Stephen O'Brien: To ask the Prime Minister if he discussed at the Stockholm European Council the effects of the UK's obligations under EU treaties and directives on the UK's scope to make decisions, with particular reference to the environment and vaccination, in relation to the foot and mouth outbreak in the United Kingdom. [156377]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 30 March 2001]: No. I refer the hon. Gentleman to the statement I made in the House on the Stockholm Council.

Mr. Luff: To ask the Prime Minister for what reason no hon. Members from rural constituencies were invited to meet him during his recent visit to Worcestershire; and if he will make a statement. [156989]

The Prime Minister: I went to the hon. Member for Worcester's constituency and was accompanied by him throughout my visit.

Mr. Luff: To ask the Prime Minister what representatives of (a) farming and (b) tourism interests from the district council area of Wychavon he met during his recent visit to Worcestershire; and if he will make a statement. [156991]

The Prime Minister: I met farming and tourism local representatives.

Mr. Luff: To ask the Prime Minister what discussions he had during his recent visit to Worcestershire with (a) officials of the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, (b) representatives of the Ministry of Defence and (c) hon. Members for constituencies in Worcestershire concerning the possible locations of a mass burial site for animals slaughtered to control foot and mouth disease; and if he will make a statement. [156990]

The Prime Minister: I discussed various aspects of the foot and mouth disease eradication strategy, including the need for additional disposal routes, with farmers and business representatives, officials, members of the armed forces and others in Worcester on 27 March. Decisions on the use of specific burial or other sites are a matter for MAFF, in consultation with the Environment Agency and other relevant authorities and others.

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Prime Minister what plans he has to set up an independent public inquiry into the foot and mouth outbreak. [157038]

The Prime Minister: We have made it clear that at the conclusion of the foot and mouth outbreak we will sit down and see what lessons can be learned. This is normal good practice after any episode of this kind. However, the form that this exercise will take has not been decided. Our top priority is to focus on implementing the mechanisms to control and eradicate the disease.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Prime Minister what assessment he has made of the evidence submitted to him on foot and mouth disease by the Soil Association. [157008]

The Prime Minister: I have received no formal submission from the Soil Association. I am, however, aware from meetings that it favours the use of vaccination, which remains under active consideration as an option in the strategy for eradicating the disease.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Police Numbers (Romsey)

Sandra Gidley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) policemen and (b) policewomen there were in the Romsey constituency in (a) 1992, (b) 1997 and (c) 2001. [155858]

Mr. Charles Clarke [holding answer 28 March 2001]: The Romsey section is covered by the Eastleigh division of the Hampshire constabulary. The force's records do not make it possible to provide information for 1992 for the Romsey section. The available information is set out in the table and has been provided by the chief constable.

Immigration and Nationality Directorate

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the (a) nature and (b) duration of delays to casework in the Immigration and Nationality Directorate caused by (i) installation of new computer systems and (ii) organisational and accommodation changes. [156093]

Mrs. Roche: Casework in the Immigration and Nationality Directorate is supported on Information Technology systems from Siemens Business Services and other operational systems used in the Immigration Service and the National Asylum Support Service. The number of terminals have expanded across the Immigration and Nationality Directorate in line with increasing numbers of staff and office locations

Casework handling has been improved by extended use of Information Technology in the Immigration Service during 2000 and 2001 and by better arrangements to exchange data between different systems.

Departmental Policies (High Peak)

Mr. Levitt: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will set out, with statistical information relating as directly as possible to the constituency, the effects on the High Peak constituency of his Department's policies and actions since May 1997. [156784]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The Home Office is working to build a safe, just and tolerant society in which the rights and responsibilities of individuals, families and communities are properly balanced, and the protection and security of the public are maintained. Detailed information on the impact of Home Office policies across the full range of responsibilities is set out in Home Office Annual Reports. A copy of the most recent report, Home Office Annual Report 2000–01, is available in the Library. Information on recorded crime and policing is also published. "Recorded Crime England and Wales, 12 months to September 2000" and "Police Service Strength England and Wales, 30 September 2000" can be found in the Library.

The recorded crime statistics include information on recorded crime by Basic Command Unit and Crime and Disorder partnerships.

The impact of Home Office policies and actions is not normally examined by constituency and the statistics which the Department collects, such as recorded crime, cannot be matched in the way requested, although set out are examples relating to the High Peak constituency or the immediate locality:

Targeted Policing Initiative

Derbyshire Constabulary were awarded £317,000 under round two of the Targeted Policing Initiative for a project which includes: mapping of the drug markets, identifying key routes and routes of supply, analysing information about the market and the production of an individual strategy for each market. The mapping of drug markets will allow for the creation of a dynamic approach to tackling the problem.

Derbyshire police, in partnership with other forces, were awarded £90,000 under round two of the Targeted Policing Initiative for a project focusing on distraction burglary. The project will undertake research into the distraction burglary problem, its true extent, how offenders target victims and how offenders can be deterred once they have selected a potential target.

Closed Circuit Television (CCTV)

High Peak borough council was awarded approximately £61,000 for a three-camera scheme covering Whaley Bridge town centre. The scheme aims to reduce the number of assaults by 11 per cent. and burglary and criminal damage by 20 per cent. over three years. It also intends to reduce the fear of crime in the town centre.

High Peak borough council has two bids shortlisted for further consideration totalling over £192,000 under round two of the initiative. These bids, if successful will be to extend the Buxton CCTV system and to provide a High Peak Mobile CCTV system.

Youth Offending

High Peak is covered by the Derbyshire Youth Offending Team (YOT). The Government have introduced multi-agency YOTs to deliver local youth justice services and work with young offenders and those at risk. These teams have been in operation across the country since 1 April 2000.

The Derbyshire YOT is providing Appropriate Adult services for young people when interviewed by police and has dealt with 242 requests for their services between April and December 2000. The Derbyshire YOT is utilising the ASSET assessment system in order to ensure intervention work is effectively targeted at the personal, family, social, educational and health problems that contribute to the causes of a young person's offending behaviour. The health staff attached to the YOT are carrying out basic assessments of young offenders for substance misuse and, where appropriate, referring them on to specialist substance misuse services for young people.

The police officers seconded to the Derbyshire and Derby City YOT have delivered 50 training sessions on the final warning scheme to over 1,200 police officers in order to ensure consistency of police assessment and referral to the YOTs. More than 12 community reparation schemes have been established throughout Derbyshire in order to allow the YOTs to deliver victim-offender mediation services. There is a wide range of activities available to meet the needs of the young person and provide opportunities for further development through accredited training and skills.

Derbyshire is benefiting from the Youth Justice Board's (YJB) development fund which has awarded grants of approximately £613,000 over three years for two bail support schemes and two intervention programmes in the county.

The Derbyshire YOT also received funding from the YJB and the Home Office Crime Reduction Programme to run a Splash scheme during the summer holidays in 2000. The scheme provided various activity schemes for young people most at risk of offending in four wards of Bolsover. This resulted in a marked reduction in nuisance calls and offending in the local area.

The Derbyshire YOT is also benefiting from funding from the National Lottery to operate a community sports initiative in Clay Cross. The initiative is currently being implemented.

More generally, all of the policies of the Home Office will impact on the residents of High Peak to a greater or lesser extent. For example:

376 Crime and Disorder Reduction Partnerships have been established;

racial harassment and racially motivated crimes have been made criminal offences by the Crime and Disorder Act 1998;

the asylum backlog has been cut from 103,495 at the end of January 2000 to 49,690 by the end of February 2001; and

good progress is being made in reducing the incidence of fire deaths in England and Wales. They have dropped from 605 in 1997 to 534 in 1999.

Information on the Home Office and its policies is also published on its website www.homeoffice.gov.uk.

Wandsworth Police

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the robbery/burglary squad at Wandsworth police was abolished; and for what reason. [156171]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The deployment of resources and arrangements put in place to fight crime are operational matters for the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis and the Divisional Commander for the Wandsworth Division.

I understand from the Commissioner that the Wandsworth Division's Robbery/Burglary Squad was reformed on 1 March 2000 into a new Crime Squad with the objective that it should concentrate on proactive investigation of robbery and burglary by the application of intelligence led methods. I am told that the Wandsworth division's more proactive approach to robbery and burglary has resulted in a number of suspects being arrested and remanded into custody, and that there has been a notable drop in offences as a result.

Asylum Support

Mr. Stunell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what range of payments in cash and in kind is made available to (a) asylum seekers awaiting determination of their claim and (b) asylum seekers who are granted admission to the United Kingdom by way of (i) grants, (ii) loans and (iii) specific access to social security payments. [155551]

Mrs. Roche: The new support arrangements for destitute asylum seekers under the Immigration and Asylum Act 1999 came into force on 3 April 2000. Under these arrangements the Home Office has taken over responsibility for supporting and accommodating asylum seekers.

Those asylum seekers in receipt of benefits, prior to 3 April 2000 will be transitionally protected and will continue to be eligible to claim Income Support, Housing Benefit and Council Tax Benefit. However, benefit is not payable to asylum seekers appealing against the refusal of refugee status. Asylum seekers who no longer qualify for social security benefits, and who have no other means of support, will be eligible for assistance from the National Asylum Support Service.

Under the new arrangements, asylum seekers receive support from the National Asylum Support Service in kind (vouchers), with a small cash allowance to meet incidental expenses. Where accommodation is provided the cost of this, and utilities are met centrally.

The Home Office also pays grants to local authorities (within fixed unit cost limits) to enable them to provide accommodation and essential living needs to asylum seekers under the interim arrangements. It is for local authorities to decide the best way to provide support to asylum seekers, within the terms of the interim scheme.

Those asylum seekers whose applications are determined favourably and who are awarded refugee status or exceptional leave are eligible for social security benefits. Those who are awarded full refugee status may qualify for a retrospective payment of Income Support, calculated as the difference between the benefit they would have received and the support paid to them by the National Asylum Support Service. Refugees will also be eligible for a backdated payment of Housing Benefit and Council Tax Benefit for any unmet rent and council tax liabilities while their asylum application was determined.

Youth Offending Teams

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what (a) evaluation and (b) multi-disciplinary inspection of the work of individual youth offending teams has been undertaken; if he will publish the evaluation results to date; what plans there are for further inspection of youth offending teams; and if he will make a statement. [156996]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The operation of youth offending teams and the programmes they run are subject to a range of independent evaluation and monitoring commissioned and operated by the Youth Justice Board. Interim evaluation reports will be published this spring on intervention programmes and bail support schemes. The Sheffield University evaluation of the piloting of youth offending teams in 10 areas from October 1998 has been published as a Home Office Occasional Paper and is available in the Library.

Two youth offending team inspections have been carried out by multi-disciplinary inspection teams who are considering their reports. The Youth Justice Board is considering the future conduct of inspection and its monitoring functions.

Crime (Shrewsbury)

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the effectiveness of banning handguns on reducing crime in the Shrewsbury Division of West Mercia Constabulary. [156515]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The legislation to prohibit handguns introduced in 1997 was a response to the tragic shootings at Dunblane primary school in 1996 in which 16 children and their teacher lost their lives. It was not expected in itself to solve the wider problem of the criminal use of firearms.

I understand that West Mercia Constabulary recorded 17 firearms incidents in the Shropshire area in 1999 and 12 such incidents in 2000. There has been one such incident so far this year. West Mercia Constabulary have not identified any particular problem with handgun crime or other armed crime in the Shrewsbury area.

Organised Crime

Shona McIsaac: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to tackle organised crime; and if he will make a statement. [157530]

Mr. Straw: The Government are making £90 million available over the next three years (2001–2004) to help tackle organised crime. The use of the money will be concentrated against heroin and cocaine trafficking, in support of the Government's strategy "Tackling Drugs to Build a Better Britain", and against people smuggling. Our approach in tackling both forms of crime as set out in the publication "Criminal Justice: The Way Ahead" is to encourage a co-ordinated inter-agency effort and the additional funding will be allocated to Her Majesty's Customs and Excise, the National Crime Squad, the National Criminal Intelligence Service, the Immigration and Nationality Directorate, the Foreign and Commonwealth Office and the security and intelligence agencies.

These additional funds will provide the means for effective new collaborative operational effort against these forms of organised crime, adding to the measures which we have announced recently for a Criminal Assets Recovery Agency and a High-tech crime strategy, for which we have also provided additional resources.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Refrigerants

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) which buildings and premises (a) owned and (b) leased by his Department use (i) chlorofluorocarbons and (ii) hydrochlorofluorocarbons for refrigeration and other energy needs; and if he will give details of such use and the reasons for it; [153015]

(2) what his Department's policy is regarding the purchase of (a) hydrocarbons and (b) other environmentally benign refrigerants to meet the refrigeration and other energy needs of buildings and premises (i) owned and (ii) leased by his Department (1) in the UK and (2) elsewhere; and if he will make a statement; [153018]

(3) to what extent (a) the new GCHQ building in Cheltenham and (b) other buildings (i) owned and (ii) leased by his Department use hydrofluorocarbons for refrigeration or air conditioning; how much hydrofluorocarbon has been purchased in each year since 1995; and what plans he has to phase out the (1) purchase and (2) use of hydrofluorocarbons. [153017]

Mr. Battle [holding answer 9 March 2001]: The Foreign and Commonwealth Office complies fully with the phase-out timetable as agreed in the Montreal Protocol of 1987, and the subsequent revisions laid down by European Commission Regulation 594/91. With the exception of domestic refrigerators (which will be replaced at the end of their natural cycle) all CFC refrigerants and Halon firefighting equipment have been replaced in FCO buildings both at home and overseas.

To date resources have been committed to the eradication of chlorofluorocarbons and Halons, but work is now commencing on the eradication of hydrofluorocarbons. Currently, HCFCs are used extensively throughout the FCO estate, almost exclusively for domestic refrigerators and air conditioning equipment. But extensive use is made of hermetically sealed units which cannot be topped up and therefore pose a minimal risk to the Ozone Layer.

The consortium constructing the new GCHQ building in Cheltenham is using HFC 143A—a zero ozone depleting product which is considered a long-term replacement for CFCs and HCFCs. It is FCO policy that all new buildings under FCO control are charged with synthetic refrigerants. Use of synthetic refrigerant gas is also increasing in larger air conditioning systems, as new or replacement equipment is installed, although progress has been restricted to date by the limited alternatives available in the marketplace.

Information on the use of HCFCs in buildings owned and leased by the FCO, at home and overseas, and on the amount of HCFCs purchased since 1995, is not held centrally and could not be assembled without disproportionate cost.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Museums and Galleries (Free Admission)

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what estimate he has made of the cost in lost admission revenue to each of the national museums and galleries which charge admission fees of introducing universal free admission. [153438]

Mr. Chris Smith: The table shows the amounts of compensation I have currently allocated to the existing charging museums for the next three years. I am though currently finalising with these institutions the final element of compensation to "buy out" the previously planned £1 charge from 1 December 2001.

Somerset House

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what discussions he has had with the Chancellor of the Exchequer concerning the occupation by the Inland Revenue of premises at Somerset House; and if he will make a statement. [156148]

Mr. Chris Smith: I have had no discussions with my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer concerning the Inland Revenue's occupation at Somerset House. The Inland Revenue occupy accommodation in the New, West and East Wings of Somerset House under the terms of a 25 years lease from the Somerset House Trust, who are responsible for the overall management of the building. The Inland Revenue are aware of a proposal made to the Somerset House Trust by Christies to take over the existing lease on the New and West Wings. The response to this proposal is a matter for the Trust in the first instance.

World Athletics Championships

Mr. Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what discussions he has had with (a) UK Sport and (b) the Mayor of London and the Greater London Authority about the costs of staging the 2005 World Athletics Championships. [156364]

Kate Hoey [holding answer 2 April 2001]: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State and I meet UK Sport from time to time to discuss a range of issues including attracting major sporting events like the 2005 IAAF World Athletics Championships to the UK. These discussions include the costs and benefits of staging such events in the UK.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State and I discussed the 2005 Championships with the Mayor of London on 23 March.

Wembley Stadium

Mr. Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what his latest estimate is of the likely date for the repayment of £20 million lottery funding by Wembley National Stadium Ltd., to the Sports Lottery Fund. [156366]

Mr. Chris Smith [holding answer 2 April 2001]: We expect the repayment of £20 million of the lottery grant awarded by Sport England to be made within the time frame agreed in December 1999, and as set out in the recent Select Committee hearing attended by both my hon. Friend the Minister for Sport and myself. Under the agreement, the final payment is due to be made by December 2004.

Digital Television

Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport when he expects the BBC and Channel 4 to join the independent television companies in promoting the new digital kite mark designed to help consumers identify genuine digital televisions; and if he will make a statement. [R] [157040]

Janet Anderson: This is a matter for the BBC and Channel 4. I understand, however, that the BBC is considering how best to raise public awareness of the DVB (Digital Video Broadcasting Project) logo, which distinguishes digital TV sets from analogue TV sets, as part of its ongoing promotion of digital services. Channel 4 has also been promoting its digital services in recent months and has indicated that it is prepared to participate in pan-industry initiatives to promote digital television, including the use of the DVB logo.

Lee Valley Athletics Stadium

Mr. Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what plans he has to underwrite the cost of (a) developing the proposed new athletics stadium at Picketts Lock and (b) staging the 2005 World Athletics Championships. [156363]

Kate Hoey [holding answer 2 April 2001]: We are fully committed to the successful staging of the IAFF World Athletics Championships in 2005 at the new Lee Valley Stadium. The Government are currently working with the project team to reduce the gap between the funding committed and the likely costs of the project, which are estimated overall to be between £83 million and £87 million.

Mr. Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what firm commitments he has received from (a) Sport England, (b) The Lee Valley Forum, (c) UK Sport and (d) other sources for the funding of the proposed new athletics stadium at Picketts Lock. [156365]

Kate Hoey [holding answer 2 April 2001]: Sport England have allocated within their budget up to £60 million to the Lee Valley National Athletics Centre. A further £7 million is available from the Lottery Sports Fund for the dedicated high performance centre which will be integrated with the stadium. Both these sums are subject to a satisfactory application for lottery funding being made.

The Lee Valley Regional Park Authority have committed £5 million to the project. UK Sport does not fund capital projects of this kind.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Benefits Agency

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) on how many occasions (a) he and (b) other Ministers in his Department have met decision makers within the Benefits Agency; [157043]

(2) for how long decision makers have decided on cases within the Benefits Agency; [157042]

(3) since when it has not been possible for the Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency to change a decision made by decision makers; and on what authority this change was made; [157044]

(4) how many decision makers there are in the Benefits Agency; on what basis they are appointed; and what the level of their salary is; [157045]

(5) if hon. Members may write on behalf of constituents direct to decision makers within the Benefits Agency; and if he will make a statement. [157046]

Angela Eagle: Ministers regularly visit staff within Benefits Agency offices.

Suitably trained and experienced staff make decisions. Staff are not recruited specifically as decision makers and may be of various grades; therefore, exact numbers are not available. The salary level of decision makers will vary according to grade.

Since the Benefits Agency was established in April 1991, it has never been possible for the Chief Executive to change a benefit decision made by a decision maker. It is only possible to change a benefit decision in accordance with the legislation.

Benefit decision notices encourage customers to contact the appropriate office if they want to know more about a decision or think it is wrong. Any queries received are directed to an appropriate officer to respond. If necessary the query will be directed to a decision maker to provide a response. Queries from customer representatives are dealt with in the same way.

Hon. Members are of course free to write to whomever they wish. However, it has been the accepted practice that, where a response is required on an individual case, the approach is made to the local office manager.

The Social Security Act 1998 transferred the functions of adjudication officers to the Secretary of State. Under new arrangements, all first instance Social Security decisions are made by officers acting on behalf of the Secretary of State. The Benefits Agency introduced the term "decision maker" during the period July to November 1999 when these provisions were introduced.

National Insurance

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 2 April 2001, Official Report, column 91W, if the new test for national insurance numbers will apply when child reference numbers are converted into national insurance numbers. [157279]

Mr. Rooker: No.

Benefit Claim Forms

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he last reviewed the application forms for benefit claims. [156701]

Mr. Rooker: We are determined to ensure that all those entitled to claim a benefit can do so with the minimum of inconvenience. The Department is currently developing a new Minimum Income Guarantee claim form. The lessons learned from that work are being extended to other benefits.

State Pension

Mr. Davidson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what the role of the basic pension is in overall pension provision in the UK. [156552]

Mr. Rooker: We aim to give everyone the chance to make their own choices about how they want to provide for their own retirement. The basic state pension is a secure foundation but, by itself, it was never meant to support the lifestyle most people want today. We believe the best way to have a secure retirement is to build up an extra amount on top of the state retirement pension.

Pensioners (Benefits)

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many pensioners have been awarded (a) Income Support and (b) the Minimum Income Guarantee in each quarter since 1997; and how many of these new claims can be attributed to a take-up campaign. [155414]

Mr. Rooker: The information is in the table.

Income Support pensioner/Minimum Income Guarantee claims February 1997 to November 2000

Thousand

Quarter	1997	1998	1999	2000
February	49.3	49.3	50.0	44.4
May	63.8	49.8	63.5	65.6
August	52.8	47.7	55.9	73.6
November	47.4	48.6	51.8	91.4

Notes:
1. Pensioners are defined where the claimant and/or partner are aged 60 or over
2. Figures are based on a 5 per cent. sample and are therefore subject to a degree of sampling error
3. Figures are rounded to the nearest hundred and are expressed in thousands
4. Numbers are based on point in time inquiries therefore no account can be taken of influxes and outflows between the dates of inquiries. This will underestimate the true levels of flows onto benefit

Pensioners

Mr. Stunell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate he has made of the number of pensioners with preserved rights who are ineligible for local authority support. [156863]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 4 April 2001]: Information on estimated numbers of pensioners with preserved rights who are ineligible for local authority support is not available.

Statutory Instruments

Jane Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security of how many statutory instruments were laid before Parliament by his Department each year from 1993 to 1998, inclusive. [156523]

Mr. Rooker: The information is in the table.

Number of statutory instruments laid

Session	Total
1993–94	62
1994–95	66
1995–96	133
1996–97	64

CABINET OFFICE

General Election Campaigns

Mr. Hammond: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what arrangements are in place to ensure that issues of (a) NHS News and (b) NHS Plan News, distributed during a General Election campaign comply with requirements for Government publications during General Election campaigns. [156445]

Marjorie Mowlam: Once a General Election is announced, guidance is issued to all Government Departments on questions of procedure and conduct during the period of the Election. This guidance will seek to ensure that no action is taken that could call into question the political impartiality of the Civil Service or give rise to criticism that public funds are being used for party political purposes. The guidance will be made public.

Mr. Hammond: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office if she will place in the Library details of the requirements with which Government publications must comply during General Election campaigns. [156446]

Marjorie Mowlam: Guidance on procedure and conduct during an election is published once an election is announced and will be placed in the Libraries at that time.

SOLICITOR-GENERAL

Sentencing Criteria

34. Fiona Mactaggart: To ask the Solicitor-General what criteria he adopts in reviewing the sentences imposed where fatalities have occurred. [155712]

The Solicitor-General: When deciding whether a sentence is unduly lenient, I look to the relevant statutory provisions and to the judgments of the Court of Appeal in similar cases. These will guide me when determining the appropriate range of sentence for particular offenders.

I may only refer sentences that are unduly lenient, not merely lenient. The Court of Appeal has held that an unduly lenient sentence is one which falls outside the range of sentences that a judge, taking into consideration all the relevant factors, could reasonably consider appropriate.

Domestic Violence

35. Helen Jackson: To ask the Solicitor-General if he will make a statement on the policy adopted by the Crown Prosecution Service to ensure the effective prosecution of incidents of domestic violence. [155713]

The Solicitor-General: Domestic violence is criminal behaviour. The Crown Prosecution Service regards it as a serious matter and will prosecute wherever it is proper to do so. The CPS recognises that safety, support and information are special priorities for victims of domestic violence and it is in this context that prosecutors will consider the range of prosecution options available.

The CPS is currently reviewing its policy on prosecuting cases of domestic violence to see if any improvements can be made; its policy has been and will continue to be that stopping domestic violence is a priority for our society. The CPS is committed to working with its partners in the criminal justice system to achieve this and has been consulting widely with the public and voluntary sectors as part of the review.

Crown Prosecution Service

36. Mr. Bercow: To ask the Solicitor-General if he will make a statement on the effectiveness of the Crown Prosecution Service in Buckinghamshire. [155714]

The Solicitor-General: Following successful implementation of the Narey fast tracking arrangements for magistrates court business in 2000, the Crown Prosecution Service and magistrates court managers in Buckinghamshire have worked hard to promote efficient listing practices in the magistrates courts. As a result, there has been effective deployment of two designated caseworkers to prosecute suitable court lists.

More recently, Buckinghamshire Crown Prosecution Service has participated with other agencies to secure agreement to an effective protocol for the accelerated sending of indictable only cases to the Crown court from 15 January 2001. This includes convenient arrangements to deal locally with the preliminary Crown court hearing of certain cases where otherwise those hearings would have been dealt with at a Crown court outside the Thames Valley area.

37. Mr. Jenkins: To ask the Solicitor-General what improvements have been made to the performance of the Crown Prosecution Service in the past three years; and if he will make a statement. [155715]

The Solicitor-General: Over the last three years the service has improved its performance in relation to eight key measures: the proportion of advance information sent to the defence within agreed time scales rose from 77.3 per cent. in 1997–98 to 86.6 per cent. in 1999–2000; the proportion of committal papers served on the defence within agreed time scales rose from 50.6 per cent. in 1997–98 to 76.6 per cent. in 2000–01; and the proportion of briefs sent to counsel within agreed time scales rose from 66.3 per cent. in 1997–98 to 77.1 per cent. in 2000–01.

Over the same period there were also improvements in the timeliness of payment of witness expenses, of replies to complaints and of replies to correspondence from Members of Parliament. More recently and most importantly, there has been a reduction in the number of adverse outcomes of cases attributable to CPS failings.

Measures relating to the quality of performance are under development to ensure that the improvements set out are matched by progress in the quality of the service provided to CPS customers and to the public.

In addition to these statistics, which are all reported in the CPS Annual Report, Her Majesty's CPS Inspectorate conduct a rolling inspection programme and each CPS area is scheduled to be inspected every two years. Reports of such area inspections are available to the public.

38. Mr. Olner: To ask the Solicitor-General what progress has been made in enforcing the Government's policy on racial equality within the Crown Prosecution Service. [155716]

The Solicitor-General: An Equality Committee and an Equality and Diversity Unit were set up to turn the Crown Prosecution Service's equality statement into a reality. All staff employed by the CPS are being trained in equality and Diversity (with a specific emphasis on race). In October 2000, at a conference of all senior managers a major part of the programme was concerned with racial equality issues. In February 2001, a one day race event was run for a cross section of 250 members of staff.

The Crown Prosecution Service is establishing a systematic approach to monitoring the performance of areas on equality general.

Money Laundering

39. Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Solicitor-General what steps the Serious Fraud Office is taking to counter money laundering. [155717]

The Solicitor-General: The Serious Fraud Office investigates and prosecutes cases of serious and complex fraud. It will investigate allegations of money laundering where the activities alleged involve or are involved in offences of serious or complex crime.

The range of offences that can lead to money laundering is wide and varied and includes drugs offences, robbery, theft and tax evasion as well as fraud. As a result, the Serious Fraud Office works in partnership with other prosecuting agencies such as the police, Customs and Excise and Inland Revenue as well as the Financial Services Authority, both to prevent and to prosecute money laundering offences.

Following conviction, the Serious Fraud Office seeks confiscation orders, in addition to the other sentences available to judges, wherever possible, to send a strong deterrent message to would-be offenders both in this country and abroad.

HEALTH

Tissue Banks

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if tissue banks will be permitted to include foetal tissues and immature gametes. [146115]

Yvette Cooper: With the explicit consent of the donor to its subsequent use, it is permissible to take and store any human tissue.

Banks storing foetal tissues and immature gametes intended for therapeutic use are included in the scope of the Code of Practice for Banks Providing Tissues of Human Origin for Therapeutic Purposes which has been developed by the Department of Health in consultation with the Royal Colleges and relevant professional bodies.

National Health Service hospitals and independent sector places, approved by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State, for the termination of pregnancy, may supply foetal tissue for research purposes. Premises supplying foetal tissue for research purposes are expected to comply with the "Polkinghorne Code of Practice on the Use of Fetuses and Fetal Material in Research and Treatment".

Smoking

Dr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of the investment in smoking cessation services set up following the White Paper, Smoking Kills. [153440]

Yvette Cooper: £10 million was invested in 1999–2000 in the 26 Health Action Zones to develop National Health Service smoking cessation services. During the first year 5,800 clients had successfully quit at four-week follow up. This represented 39 per cent. of clients setting a quit date, as against our target based on research evidence of an achievable average rate of 26 per cent.

In 2000–01 all health authorities in England were funded to provide smoking cessation services. In the first two quarters of the year there were 12,900 clients who had successfully quit at four-week follow-up. This represented 40 per cent. of those setting a quit date.

We are also making smoking cessation aids available on the NHS to help smokers to quit. The new smoking cessation aid, Zyban, has been available on NHS prescription since June 2000, and we have recently announced that nicotine replacement therapy will also be available on NHS prescription in April 2001. Both these aids to smoking cessation are proven to be effective and cost effective in helping smokers to quit.

We have commissioned research into the effectiveness of the NHS smoking cessation services to inform future developments in this area.

Royal Shrewsbury Hospital

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many (a) nurses, (b) doctors and (c) consultants were employed by the Royal Shrewsbury Hospital (i) on 1 May 1997 and (ii) for the latest date for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement. [154654]

Yvette Cooper: Data are not collected centrally in the format requested. The table shows the latest available data, which indicate an increase in staffing at the trust in each of the groups identified.

National Health Service Hospital and Community Health Services (HCHS): Hospital medical staff and nursing, midwifery and health visiting staff working for the Royal Shrewsbury Hospital National Health Service Trust, as at 30 September each year.

General Practitioners

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if the additional £10,000 allocated to general practitioner surgeries in England will be incorporated into general practitioners' contracts and terms of service. [155629]

Mr. Denham: The additional resources are to be used by primary care groups and primary care trusts to develop primary care in ways that improve services to patients. On average £10,000 per practice is available. The additional resources are to be used by PCG/Ts to develop primary care in ways that improve services to patients. On average £10,000 per practice is available. The money will be in addition to existing funding to practices.

Speech and Language Therapists

Ms Perham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to increase recruitment and improve retention of speech and language therapists. [155420]

Mr. Denham: We are implementing a range of measures to improve recruitment and retention for all staff, including speech and language therapists. Examples include investing in fair pay, encouraging the National Health Service to become a better employer, increasing training commissions, attracting former staff back to the NHS, encouraging flexible retirement, and supporting more effective, collaborative international recruitment where appropriate. The Department is working with the Royal College of Speech and Language Therapists to implement these measures.

The Secretary of State recently announced that allied health professionals deciding to return to the NHS, including speech and language therapists, will be eligible for free refresher training, a payment of £1,000 to support them while undertaking refresher training and assistance with childcare, travel and books.

Oral Tobacco Products

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress is being made on controlling the import of oral tobacco products with particular reference to gutkha. [155883]

Yvette Cooper [holding answer sent 28 March 2001]: So long as oral tobacco from overseas sources does not fall within a banned category, complies with United Kingdom Customs duty regulations and carries health warnings, their import into the UK is not illegal.

However, we wish to ensure that people have information about health risks. We are, therefore, seeking to develop greater awareness of the health risks associated with oral tobacco as part of our tobacco information strategy. We are working on a dedicated campaign, focused on high risk ethnic minority populations, to address the health risks of smoking and the use of oral tobacco in order to decrease demand for these products. We have funded a training pack for trading standards officers on oral tobacco.

Aintree Hospitals NHS Trust

Mr. Benton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will take steps to ensure the early appointment of a new chief executive at University Hospital Aintree, Aintree Hospitals NHS Trust. [156150]

Mr. Denham: Unfortunately, this post had to be re-advertised because of a lack of suitable candidates. I am pleased to report a good response to the re-advertisement, from which a short list of suitable candidates will be drawn. It is expected that interviews will be held before the end of April. In the meantime, the trust's Medical Director is fulfilling the responsibilities of the post in an acting capacity.

Correspondence

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he will respond to the letter dated 8 February from the hon. Member for Altrincham and Sale, West regarding the case of Josh Galloway, a constituent. [156098]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 29 March 2001]: A reply to the hon. Member's letter was sent on 4 April.

Mrs. Roe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when the hon. Member for Broxbourne will receive a reply to her letters of 3 January, 1 February, 1 March and 28 March relating to her constituent, Mrs. I. Wildish of Cheshunt, Hertfordshire. [156697]

Ms Stuart [holding answer 2 April 2001]: A reply to the hon. Member's letters was sent on 4 April 2001.

Child Protection

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has carry out research at regular intervals into the prevalence of child maltreatment. [156145]

Mr. Hutton: One of our stated objectives for children's social services (published in 1999) is to ensure that children are protected from emotional, physical and sexual abuse and neglect (significant harm). Within this objective, we have made clear our determination to reduce the incidence of both child abuse (significant harm) and repeated child abuse (significant harm).

The Department's policy research programme is mounting a new research and development initiative to contribute to the evaluation of the "Quality Protects" programme. The initiative will examine how the objectives of the programme are being translated into practice. The research and dissemination budget for the initiative will be £2 million over a period of four years.

In March this year, we invited tenders for this research initiative. There are four main areas of focus identified in the briefing paper for tenders, including "Children's protection from significant harm". The briefing paper invites proposals for a pilot study on the incidence of significant harm and repeated significant harm.

Health Services (Hazel Grove)

Mr. Stunell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many vacancies for general practitioners there were in the Hazel Grove constituency in (a) 1992, (b) 1997 and (c) 2001. [156179]

Mr. Denham: The number of vacancies for general practitioners for the Stockport health authority area in 1992, 1997 and 2001 is not available. However the number of general practitioners (GP) in Stockport health authority during this period is as follows:

	All practitioners	Unrestricted principals and equivalents (UPEs)[1]

Notes:
1. General medical practitioners (excluding GP retainers) includes UPEs, restricted principals, salaried doctors (paragraph 52 of Statement of Fees and Allowances) and personal medical service (PMS), others; and [1] UPEs includes general medical services, unrestricted principals, PMS contracted GPs and PMS salaried GPs.
2. GP retainers were collected for the first time in the 1999 census. For comparability they have been excluded from the 2000 figure.
3. There were six GP retainers in Stockport health authority as at 30 September 2000.

Mr. Stunell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many NHS registered dentists there were in the Hazel Grove constituency in (a) 1992, (b) 1997 and (c) 2001. [156180]

Mr. Hutton: Information on the number of dentists is available by health authority rather than by constituency.

Hazel Grove constituency was located in Stockport Family Health Service, Authority (FHSA) at September 1992. From April 1996 Stockport FHSA changed to Stockport health authority (HA).

The number of dentists in the general dental service at 30 September is shown in the table for Stockport FHSA for 1992 and HA for 1997 and 2000.

General Dental Service: Number of dentists by HA at 30 September each year

Stockport FHSA	107
1997

Doctors and Nurses (Stockport)

Mr. Stunell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many vacancies for NHS doctors and nurses there were in the Stockport health authority area in (a) 1992, (b) 1997 and (c) 2001. [156181]

Mr. Denham: The Department has no information available for 1992 and 1997. The March 2001 vacancy survey is currently being collected and the results should be published in July 2001.

Teenage Pregnancy

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the current level of teenage pregnancy in the UK. [156169]

Yvette Cooper: The Office for National Statistics published details of conception rates for 1999, including those among teenagers, on 22 March. To coincide with publication of the data, a statement was issued by this Department (press release 2001–0143).

The statistics show that in England, conception rates among the under 16s fell by seven per cent., and by four per cent. among the under 18s. This is encouraging news.

However, our rates remain high and we cannot afford to be complacent. That is why we are stepping up our programme to tackle teenage pregnancy.

Action planned for the next six months includes: an assessment of advice and contraception services; providing sex and relationship education in all young offender institutions; issuing new guidance on involving young people in devising teenage pregnancy strategies and for youth workers and social workers on their role in preventing teenage pregnancy; and providing information to all areas about local projects which are already making an impact.

Information about levels of teenage pregnancy in Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland is available from the devolved administrations.

Health Professionals (Contracts)

Mr. Cotter: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the Government's negotiations with the British Medical Association for new contracts for health professionals. [156452]

Mr. Denham: Our proposals for a new approach to the consultant contract and a consultation document on a new award scheme were published on 21 February.

We are committed to seeking a negotiated outcome.

Osteopaths Act

Mr. Gale: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 26 March 2001, Official Report, column 451W, on the General Osteopathic Council, if he will report back to those hon. Members who have raised concerns about the implementation of the Osteopaths Act 1993. [156270]

Yvette Cooper [holding answer sent 30 March 2001]: It is my intention to report back to all those hon. Members who spoke in the Adjournment Debate, and to those who have written to me to raise concerns about the implementation of the Osteopaths Act.

GP's (Shropshire)

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many general practitioners there were in Shropshire (a) in May 1997 and (b) on the most recent date for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement. [156563]

Yvette Cooper: We are committed to increasing the number of staff working within the National Health Service and funds have been made available to employ 2,000 more general practitioners (GPs) by 2004. The table illustrates the number of general medical practitioners (GMP) in Shropshire health authority area.

Number of GMPs (excluding GP retainers)[1] in Shropshire health authority on 1 October 1997 and 30 September 2000

Flu Vaccinations

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many and what proportion of those aged over 65 years received flu vaccinations in Shrewsbury and Atcham this winter; and if he will make a statement. [156497]

Yvette Cooper: Final monitoring figures received from the flu co-ordinator for Shropshire Health Authority at the end of December 2000, reported that 67 per cent. of those aged 65 and over received a flu immunisation. This is 7 percentage points higher than the national target of 60 per cent. coverage set at the start of the campaign.

Cervical Screening

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the reasons underlying the length of time between the decision by NICE on the approval of the Thin Prep Pap Test and its planned implementation. [156551]

Yvette Cooper: The pilot study to assess the feasibility of using liquid based cytology (LBC) in the National Health Service cervical screening programme is being progressed in line with the overall guidance published by the National Institute of Clinical Excellence (NICE) in June 2000. LBC is being piloted in conjunction with human papilloma virus (HPV) testing.

Since NICE's recommendation, the three sites for the pilot study have been selected, pilot staff have been trained in the new procedures, and new equipment has been installed on site. Screening began in March 2001, as originally planned.

Cancer

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he is taking to reduce the time patients have to wait to receive cancer scans and biopsies. [156768]

Yvette Cooper: We are making significant investment in equipment of £93 million from the New Opportunities Fund which is being used to buy over 300 pieces of equipment for the breast screening programme, along with 34 MRI scanners and 30 linear accelerators. A further £100 million from the Modernisation Fund is being used to update and replace 66 CT scanners and planning equipment for cancer treatment.

We have launched a new initiative to increase the number of histopathologists in training by investing £1.3 million to fund three pilot training centres. We are also investing £2.5 million a year in a training programme for general practitioners, nurses, surgeons and gastroenterologists to undertake endoscopy. Investment in work force means that by 2006 there will be nearly 1,000 extra cancer specialists. Over the summer cancer networks will be developing three year service delivery plans to include work force, education and facilities strategies.

The cancer services collaborative has demonstrated that by changing the way cancer services are provided, for example by pre-planning and pre-booking care, waiting times can be cut and a major impact can be made on cancer care. From 1 April 2001 the improvements in cancer care developed by the collaborative are being rolled out to every cancer network in the country, supported by up to £15 million central funding.

Primary Care Incentive Schemes

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list (a) present and (b) proposed incentive schemes in primary care together with their purposes. [156732]

Mr. Denham: There are a number of incentive schemes currently in place to encourage best practice in primary care including the prescribing incentives scheme and the sustained quality allowance scheme (details in Health Service Circular 1998/228 and HSC1999/107 respectively). Copies are available in the Library.

On 19 March my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister announced an additional £100 million of investment available to primary care groups and primary care trusts to draw up incentive schemes in association with their constituent practices. These schemes should focus upon delivering local services.

This new investment is intended to stimulate innovation. £50 million will be available recurrently to enable practices to invest up front in service improvement. The second tranche of the moneys (£50 million) will be available non recurrently to reward achievement of the targets agreed locally by practices with their PCG or PCT. It will be for the practice to determine how to use these moneys which may be personal reward to individuals or additional investment to further support service development and staff training. This investment equates to a figure of approximately £2 per head of population with an average practice receiving £10,000 additional investments.

Medical Records

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what mechanisms will be put in place to ensure that patients will have an input into decisions over access to their medical records when electronic patient records are introduced. [156731]

Ms Stuart: A number of electronic record demonstrator projects are looking at this aspect of electronic patient record development. Any mechanisms put in place will need to reflect the requirements of Data Protection legislation and generally common law obligations of confidentiality.

Primary Care Trusts

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the benefits arising from the introduction of primary care trusts. [156733]

Mr. Denham: Primary care trusts (PCTs) are local, relevant and accessible organisations to both the community they serve and the clinicians who provide the care. PCTs have a range of freedoms and flexibilities greater than any other health service body. They provide improved support to practices and clinicians, commission and deliver improved services through the integration of primary and community health care and shape services in response to the needs of their local populations. They bring decisions about services closer to patients and local communities, ensuring that they are taken by those who understand their patients' needs. PCTs are demonstrating an ability to balance local knowledge against capacity to manage the provision of services and the management resources to deliver. Owing to the flexibility PCTs have to form responsive local services, there exists a large variety of initiatives across the country.

One hundred and twenty-four new PCTs became operational on 1 April 2001 bringing the total number of PCTs to 164. In two years, the percentage of the population in England whose healthcare is being delivered by a PCT has risen from zero to approximately 48 per cent. The benefits of PCT status for services to patients, the public and for healthcare are being realised now that the first 17 PCTs have completed their first year of operation.

Hepatitis C

Dr. Naysmith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will pay compensation to patients with haemophilia and other blood disorders who have contracted hepatitis C through infected blood transfusions; and if he will make a statement. [156858]

Mr. Denham: We have reviewed the previous Government's decision not to offer financial assistance to haemophilia patients infected with hepatitis C through blood products. We concluded that an exception could not be made to the general rule that compensation or financial help is only given when the National Health Service, or individuals working in it, have been at fault.

Surrey and Sussex Healthcare NHS Trust

Mr. Blunt: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what advice he received in respect of suspending the concentration of services within the Surrey and Sussex Healthcare NHS Trust; and if he will publish that advice; [157093]

(2) what consideration he gave in reaching his decision to suspend the concentration of services within the Surrey and Sussex Healthcare NHS Trust (a) to patient safety, (b) staff morale and (c) cost; and if he will make a statement. [157094]

Ms Stuart: I have carefully considered all the representations made to me over the past few months about the future of acute services at the Surrey and Sussex Healthcare National Health Service Trust and have decided that it would be in the best interest of the local population that any further changes are suspended until the conclusions of the South East Surrey and North West Sussex Service review are known.

In the interim, the South East Regional Office of the NHS Executive will work closely with the trust to ensure that services continue to be provided safely.

Foster Carers

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what account has been taken of representations from fostering organisations about the impact on the recruitment and retention of foster carers of the Inland Revenue's proposals for taxing payments. [157069]

Mr. Hutton: Meetings have taken place between officials of the Inland Revenue, the Department of Health, representatives from the Association of Directors of Social Services, the National Foster Care Association, British Agencies for Adoption and Fostering, the Forum of Independent Fostering Agencies, plus other interested parties, such as accountants with relevant expertise in this area. The intention is to agree an appropriate and fair level of average allowable expenses to set against any income that a foster carer may receive from either a local authority or a fostering agency.

It has now been agreed that existing local arrangements will continue to apply until such time as a mutually acceptable agreement on average allowable expenses can be agreed. We hope this will be well in advance of 6 April 2002. We are committed to involving fostering organisations in this process.

Alcohol Misuse

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to publish a report on a long-term strategy to deal with alcohol abuse. [156910]

Ms Stuart: We remain committed to the publication of a cross Government strategy to tackle alcohol misuse, and we are working with key stakeholders across Government, the alcohol field and the alcohol industry to ensure that this commitment is delivered.

The NHS Plan, published in July 2000, said that the Department would be implementing the strategy by 2004. The Department expects to publish a consultation paper in due course.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

School Closures

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list the occasions on which schools have (a) closed and (b) sent children home early due to (i) foot and mouth disease, (ii) teacher sickness, (iii) adverse weather conditions and (iv) teacher shortages, in the last year for which figures are available. [156918]

Ms Estelle Morris: This information is not collected centrally. Schools may decide to close or to send pupils home early for a number of reasons, especially where they judge the health and safety of pupils to be at risk. Neither schools nor local education authorities are required to report such decisions.

Independent Schools

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what estimate he has made of the percentage of children (a) of compulsory school age and (b) 16 and over who attended independent schools in each of the last 10 years. [157058]

Ms Estelle Morris: The data requested are shown in the table.

Pupils in independent schools[1]

	Percentage of pupils of compulsory school age[2]	Percentage of pupils aged 16+[3]
2000	6.0	19.0

1995	6.1	21.5

Student Loans

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Truro and St. Austell (Mr. Taylor) of 9 February 2001, Official Report, column 764W on student loans, if he will estimate the rate of interest required to increase the net present value of student loans in 1999–2000 by £455 million. [156662]

Mr. Wicks [holding answer 2 April 2001]: The net present value of the estimated £982 million income contingent loans issued in 1999–2000 to students domiciled in England and Wales is estimated to be £590 million. The nominal rate of interest required to increase this by £455 million is estimated to be around 10 per cent.

Shakespeare

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment, pursuant to his answer of 5 March 2001, Official Report, column 3W, on Shakespeare, what plans he has for the examining at GCSE of the required study of Shakespeare and the other literary figures referred to in his answer. [156147]

Mr. Wicks: Currently there are two GCSE examinations: GCSE English—which covers the full National Curriculum programme of study in English, including the literature requirements—and GCSE English Literature which ranges more widely. The proposal to review the GCSE in English arose from a review of examination standards over time commissioned and published by the previous administration. The Qualifications and Curriculum Authority has been consulting widely on how to take forward recommendations from the SCAA/Ofsted report "Standards in Public Examinations 1975 to 1995" published in December 1996. We have insisted that the proportion of Shakespeare and other major figures from British literature covered in any proposals for a new English examination should not be diminished.

OECD

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what recent discussions he has had with officials of the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development on standards in education in the UK. [156860]

Mr. Wicks: My noble Friend the Minister for Education and Employment attended the meeting of OECD Education Ministers on 3 and 4 of April to review the OECD's work over the last five years and agree its forward work programme for the next five years. My Department will continue to co-operate closely with OECD in securing lifelong learning for all to meet the new skill demands of the knowledge economy; and in developing innovative teaching and learning to address the challenges for tomorrow's school systems.

Veterinary Students

Mr. Borrow: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what proportion of students on veterinary courses are from (a) state schools and (b) state schools in the north of England; and what the breakdown is in each of the veterinary colleges. [155349]

Mr. Wicks: The available information from the Universities and Colleges Admissions service (UCAS) is shown in the table. UCAS do not release data for individual institutions at subject level.

Sixth Form Funding (Shrewsbury and Atcham)

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list for each year since 1992 the average funding per student, for each sixth form college in Shrewsbury and Atcham; and if he will make a statement. [156490]

Mr. Wicks: Shrewsbury and Atcham has one sixth form college: Shrewsbury Sixth Form College. The average funding per student is available for the following years as follows:

Academic year	Funding per student
1995–96	1,872
1996–97	1,882
1997–98	2,245
1998–99	2,258
1999–2000	2,410

Student Support Arrangements

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what proportion of parents are (a) expected to and (b) discharge their obligations to fund their children who are students under the student support arrangements. [155874]

Mr. Wicks [holding answer 28 March 2001]: In England and Wales students on undergraduate courses and their families are expected to make a contribution towards their tuition fees and living costs (maintenance) only if they can afford to do so.

In academic year 1998–99, the latest year for which data are available, the proportion of higher education students whose parents were assessed to pay towards their support under the Education (Student Support) Regulations and who were assessed to contribute towards their fees was 65 per cent. Of these, an estimated 41 per cent. were assessed to pay the full support (£1,000 in 1998–99) and 24 per cent. were assessed to pay a partial contribution towards fees.

Data on parental contributions to tuition fees and to students' maintenance are available from the Student Income and Expenditure Survey in 1998–99. Based on a nationally representative sample of just over 2000 full-time students the survey estimates that the parents of 42 per cent. of students were assessed to make a contribution towards maintenance. Of these students 50 per cent. received more than the assessed amount, 20 per cent. received the exact amount, while the remaining 30 per cent. received less than the assessed amount.

The new student support arrangements introduced in 1999–2000 more than doubled the maximum amount of student loan from £1,685 to £3,635, in order to ensure that parents pay no more in upfront contributions than under the previous system. The value of the loan under the new arrangements increased, in cash terms, by 62 per cent. between 1997–98 and 1998–99 (the transitional year) and by 116 per cent. between 1997–98 and 1999–2000 when support for living costs was solely through loans (except for students in vulnerable groups who are also eligible for supplementary grants).

In 1998–99 only first year students were liable to pay tuition fees. In the Student Income and Expenditure Survey 42 per cent. of first year students said that their parents had been assessed to make a contribution towards fees, and of these four in five said that they had received the full amount. The one in five students who reported receiving less than the full parental contribution to fees is based on a small sample of students (237). This small number, although the result of a nationally representative sample, is subject to sampling error.

Universities UK (formerly the Committee of Vice-Chancellors and Principals) conducts periodic surveys of fee payment to higher education institutions. The latest, in November 2000, estimated that 97 per cent. of students' fee contributions for the previous academic year would be paid by the end of October 2000.

School Internet Connections (Shrewsbury and Atcham)

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many secondary schools in Shrewsbury and Atcham were connected to the internet (a) in May 1997 and (b) on the most recent date for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement. [156491]

Mr. Wills: The Department does not hold this information on a constituency basis. However, since 1996 the percentage of primary and secondary schools in England with internet connections has increased from 5 per cent. to 86 per cent., and from 47 per cent. to 98 per cent., respectively. I am confident therefore that we are on track to meet our target of connecting all schools to the internet by 2002 and, in doing so, to enable all pupils to benefit from access to resources that will enrich their learning and help to improve standards.

New Deal

Mr. Blizzard: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) if he will make a statement on the role of the local New Deal Strategy Group in determining whether direct displacement of existing employees has taken place in firms participating in the New Deal; [155062]

(2) what sanctions exist against a company which has contravened the rules of the New Deal relating to the direct displacement of existing employees. [155053]

Ms Jowell: When an employer signs up to New Deal they sign an employer agreement which states they have not made anyone redundant or displaced to create the vacancy. The agreement is usually signed on behalf of the Employment Service by the local Business Manager who initiates action if an employer is found to have contravened the agreement. If this proves to be the case, the Employment service would refuse to service any further vacancies for that employer.

The New Deal Strategic Partnership would not normally be involved in issues to do with the displacement of existing employees by New Deal participants. Their role includes producing local strategic plans, monitoring delivery and harnessing local support for New Deal.

Jobcentres (Scotland)

Mr. Davidson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many Jobcentre offices and premises there are in each constituency in Scotland. [156570]

Ms Jowell: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its Chief Executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given, which has been placed in the Library.

Departmental Policies (High Peak)

Mr. Levitt: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will set out, with statistical information relating as directly as possible to the constituency, the effects on the High Peak constituency of his Department's policies and actions since May 1997. [156782]

Mr. Wills: Details of the effects of a range of the Department's policies on the High Peak constituency and Derbyshire LEA have been placed in the Library.

PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL

Government Bills

Mr. Stunell: To ask the President of the Council, pursuant to her answer of 22 March 2001, Official Report, column 314W, on Government bills, what measures she has put in place to monitor the effectiveness of her policy to reduce the number of Government amendments tabled to Government Bills; and if she will make a statement. [156156]

Mrs. Beckett: Last Session, the number of pages in Bills grew by 28.8 per cent. between introduction and enactment. This Session, the increase is running at 3.8 per cent. However, there will always be occasions when the Government will need or wish to respond to relevant developments and table amendments as a result.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Foot and Mouth

8. Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the role of livestock markets on the spread of foot and mouth disease. [155685]

Mr. Morley: The movement of sheep has been a key factor in the spread of foot and mouth disease. We estimate that some 700,000 sheep were sold through livestock markets in Great Britain in February before movement restrictions were imposed. The total movement of sheep in this period will be very much higher. I have launched a consultation on the issue of a standstill period following movements of sheep, goats and cattle, and will also be looking at questions such as traceability, the operation of markets and, in particular, out of ring sales.

11. Mr. Paterson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the foot and mouth crisis. [155688]

Mr. Morley: Foot and mouth disease is having a devastating effect of farmers and others involved in the livestock industry, on the tourism industry and on rural communities in general. Experts agree that the nature and impact of the outbreak is unprecedented. Our top priority remains to contain and eradicate the disease as quickly as possible. Separately we are providing assistance to those worst affected.

16. Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the level of farmers' incomes prior to the foot and mouth outbreak; and what assessment he has made of the effect of foot and mouth on this year's farmers' incomes. [155693]

Ms Quin: Farm incomes have been seriously depressed. Average income from farming in 2000 was £8,500. This represents a drop of 25 per cent. in real terms as compared to 1999.

At this stage it is not possible to quantify the impact the foot and mouth outbreak may have on the incomes of the industry as a whole though it clearly has had a very serious impact on those farmers directly affected. That is why the government have already responded by introducing a number of targeted measures to assist the livestock industry. Overall, we expect the agrimonetary compensation and the welfare disposal scheme to provide over £400 million to livestock farmers.

26. Mr. Pike: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the latest developments in the foot and mouth disease outbreak. [155704]

Ms Quin: This is an appalling disease which is having a devastating effect on farmers, rural communities and all those involved in the livestock industry. Our top priority remains to contain and eradicate it as quickly as possible.

27. Mr. Randall: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what recent meetings he has held with farmers representatives in the last month to discuss the foot and mouth outbreak. [155705]

Ms Quin: We have regularly met a wide range of farming and other organisations since the beginning of the outbreak. In addition, we hold weekly meetings on foot and mouth with stakeholders.

28. Dr. Palmer: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action he has taken to preserve rare breeds during the foot and mouth outbreak. [155706]

Ms Quin: Animals are slaughtered if they are found to be affected by foot and mouth disease. However, following the Chief Veterinary Officer's recent visit to Cumbria, we are reviewing the implications for rare breeds, particularly where these are located in the 3km zone surrounding infected premises.

29. Mr. Chope: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he last met the Forestry Commission to discuss precautions against foot and mouth disease. [155707]

Mr. Morley: I have talked to the Forestry Commission about its response to the foot and mouth outbreak on several occasions over the last few weeks. The most recent occasion was yesterday.

Mr. Gill: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the regulations which govern on-farm burial of animal carcases. [156202]

Ms Quin [holding answer 30 March 2001]: In England, the regulations which govern the on-farm burial of animal carcases are the Animal By-Products Order 1999, the Water Resources Act 1991 and the Groundwater Regulations 1998.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he has carried out an assessment of the risk due to BSE infectivity from disposal of cattle during the present outbreak of foot and mouth disease. [157585]

Mr. Nick Brown: On 30 March, the Spongiform Encephalopathy Advisory Committee (SEAC) considered the independent assessment from DNV Consulting of the public health risk due to BSE infectivity from burning cattle during the present foot and mouth disease outbreak. This assessment was placed in the Libraries of the House on 15 March. Taking account of comments from SEAC and the Environment Agency, this assessment has been revised to include the possible BSE risks from burying cattle carcases on farm and in landfill. Copies of this 1 April revision of the DNV risk assessment have been placed in the Libraries of the House, and are today being published on the MAFF Foot and Mouth Disease internet site.

SEAC advised that the risk from burning (or burying) cattle born on or after August 1996 would be at least 400 times lower than the risk from burning (or burying) a similar number of cattle born before this date. In the light of SEAC's advice, the Environment Agency is advising that, depending on local hydrogeological and other factors and subject to site specific risk assessments, cattle born on or after 1 August 1996 may be buried.

Agrimonetary Compensation

9. Kali Mountford: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to ensure prompt payments for claims under the agrimonetary compensation scheme. [155686]

Mr. Nick Brown: Payments of the £156 million optional agrimonetary compensation to livestock farmers will begin later this week following accelerated approval by the European Commission. Sheep farmers are already receiving the payments due to them in compulsory agrimonetary compensation, and payment of their optional amounts will be under way during April. Dairy producers can expect to receive the bulk of their agrimonetary payments during April and May, with residual balance payments being made to them later in the year. Payments to beef producers will begin in May.

Livestock Farmers

10. Mr. Blunt: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he had made of the impact of Government policy on Britain's livestock farmers. [155687]

Mr. Morley: Livestock farmers will receive some £735 million in 2000–01 by way of payments under the principal EU livestock schemes—for suckler cows, beef cattle and sheep. In the present difficult circumstances, we have taken steps to ensure that farmers who have lost animals as a result of foot and mouth disease preserve their entitlement to premiums. In addition, the Government are paying compensation at full market value for animals slaughtered because of FMD, and have made available compensation under the optional Livestock Welfare Disposal Scheme for those farmers who face immediate welfare difficulties. £156 million of optional agrimonetary compensation is about to be paid to livestock farmers.

Food Imports

12. Mr. Stephen O'Brien: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on agricultural food imports into the United Kingdom. [155689]

Ms Quin: I refer the hon. Member to today's earlier oral answer given to the hon. Members for Buckingham (Mr. Bercow) and for Poole (Mr. Syms), at columns 489-90.

Common Fisheries Policy

13. Dr. Godman: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he discussed regional management of the fisheries when he last met his European counterparts to discuss the review of the common fisheries policy. [155690]

Mr. Morley: I regularly raise the need to develop regional management of fisheries when I meet my European counterparts. I look forward to the opportunity of pursuing this in the Fisheries Councils on 25 April and 18 June when the Commission's suggestions on the issue contained in its Green Paper on the future of the CFP will be discussed.

Farm Incomes

14. Mr. Bill O'Brien: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what proposals he has for the reform of the common agricultural policy in relation to farmers' incomes; and if he will make a statement. [155691]

Ms Quin: Farm incomes have been seriously depressed latterly, principally as a result of the weakness of the Euro against sterling, low world commodity prices, the impact of BSE and now the outbreak of foot and mouth disease. There are also longstanding structural weaknesses in the agricultural sector arising from the tradition of production-based subsidies under the Common Agricultural Policy. That is why the Government are firmly committed to securing further reform.

Insurable Diseases

15. Dr. Cable: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he has taken to widen the take-up of private insurance for insurable diseases, including foot and mouth. [155692]

Ms Quin: At the outset of last year's outbreak of classical swine fever, we established a joint Government/ industry working party to consider what measures the livestock industry could take to protect itself in future against the commercial consequences of animal disease outbreaks. The working party is looking at the existing and potential role of animal disease insurance.

State Veterinary Service

17. Mr. Conker: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what the change in the number of veterinarians employed by the state veterinary service was (a) from 1979–80 to 1997–98 and (b) from 1997–98 to date. [155694]

Ms Quin: The State Veterinary Service employed 597 full-time equivalents in 1979. In 1997 there were 289 full-time equivalents in the Service. At present there are 286 full-time equivalent veterinarians in the Service. There are currently over 1,200 veterinarians working to control foot and mouth disease.

Dairy Regime

18. Mr. Hopkins: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to reform the dairy regime of the common agricultural policy. [155695]

Ms Quin: We will continue to seek an orderly end to the milk quota system which unfairly constrains our producers.

Mackerel (Conservation)

19. Mrs. Gilroy: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what discussions he has recently had with respect to conservation of mackerel. [155696]

Mr. Morley: I am aware of concerns in the south-west about the conservation of mackerel including some requests for a reopening of the Mackerel Box. The scientific advice is clear that the Box should remain. I am however seeking ICES advice on the issue.

Scientific Advice

20. Mr. Michael Jabez Foster: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he has taken to ensure that scientific advice to Ministers is made public. [155697]

Ms Quin: My right hon. Friend the Minister announced on 15 February that all scientific appraisals prepared to inform policy decisions in MAFF will be put into the public domain. We have also taken a number of steps to increase the openness of the Scientific Advisory Committees advising MAFF, including holding open sessions, publishing agendas and minutes of meetings and issuing public reports.

Beef Farmers

21. Mr. Peter Atkinson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what meetings he has held with beef farmers representatives in the last month. [155698]

Ms Quin: Beef farmers are represented at the weekly meetings on FMD we are holding with stakeholders.

Hill Farmers

22. Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what changes he forecasts in the subsidy regime affecting hill farmers from 2001 to 2005. [155700]

Ms Quin: The hill farm allowance scheme has been approved by the Commission as a basis for hill farm support in England up to 2006. However, we will keep the scheme under review, and will propose modifications taking account of the report of the Hills Task Force, commissioned research into alternative approaches to land classification, and other developments including the foot and mouth disease outbreaks.

Flood Defences

23. Sir Michael Spicer: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on flood defences. [155701]

Mr. Morley: MAFF has policy responsibility for flood and coastal defence in England. Operational responsibility falls to the "operating authorities", the Environment Agency, internal drainage boards and local authorities.

The Government's policy aim is to reduce the risks to people and the developed and natural environment from flooding and coastal erosion by encouraging the provision of technically, environmentally and economically sound and sustainable defence measures. Our three objectives for delivering this aim are:

to encourage the provision of adequate and cost-effective flood warning systems; to encourage the provision of adequate, technically, environmentally and economically sound and sustainable flood and coastal defence measures; and to discourage inappropriate development in areas at risk from flooding or coastal erosion.

Delivery of the aim and objectives is facilitated by inter alia a series of high level targets for the flood and coastal defence operating authorities which took effect in April 2000.

25. Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on plans to prevent flooding in and around the Thames and Medway estuaries. [155703]

Mr. Morley: Responsibility for deciding which flood defence works to promote and their timing rests with operating authorities such as the Environment Agency. I understand that the agency has embarked on a programme of studies with a view to formulating a strategy for flood risk management in the whole Thames estuary, with more specific studies planned for elements such as the Medway estuary.

Mr. Hilary Benn: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to improve flood defences in Leeds city centre. [156806]

Mr. Morley: The Ministry has policy responsibility for flood defence in England and administers grant aid for capital defence works. However it is for local operating authorities, normally the Environment Agency or the local council, to determine which projects to promote and their timing. I understand that the agency has commissioned a number of strategic studies for the River Aire with a view to considering options for flood alleviation measures in Leeds and other towns on the river.

Herds and Flocks (Health Status)

24. Mr. Boswell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what studies he has conducted into the health status of herds and flocks in (a) Britain and (b) other countries. [155702]

Ms Quin: The health status of flocks and herds in Great Britain is the subject of ongoing surveillance for notifiable and non-notifiable diseases. For flocks and herds abroad, we rely on advice from the Office of International Epizootics and on information collected by the European Commission. The 1999 Annual Report of the Chief Veterinary Officer gives an overview of the work undertaken.

Rural Development

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to increase the proportion of Common Agricultural Policy expenditure devoted to rural development. [155699]

Ms Quin: The Government are committed to further expansion of rural development measures: the "second pillar" of the CAP. In England some £1.6 billion is being injected into rural areas over seven years. In practice, this means increasing spending from 1999 levels by about 60 per cent. over the period. £300 million of this will be money redirected, or "modulated", from direct support mechanisms. The Government are supplementing this modulated money with a further £300 million. At Community level, we will continue to press for a greater share of EU funding from the second pillar.

Hill Farm Allowance

Mr. Stunell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what estimate he has made of the administrative costs of the Hill Farm Allowance scheme as a percentage of grants disbursed. [156864]

Ms Quin [holding answer 4 April 2001]: The budget for HFA payments has been determined in the context of the England Rural Development Programme, the Action Plan for Farming and the Spending Review and is entirely separate from the Ministry's running costs. However, this year the costs of administering HFA payments in England, ignoring design and setting up costs, are expected to be about 1.5 per cent. of the payments made.

Pigswill

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when the proposed ban on pigswill comes into effect; and how the pigswill will then be disposed of. [156279]

Ms Quin [holding answer 2 April 2001]: The consultation period on the proposed ban on the use of pigswill ends on 10 April. Our intention is for an order to be made as soon as possible thereafter and for the ban to come into force 3 to 4 weeks later. The disposal of the material formerly used to produce pigswill will then be subject to the requirements of the duty of care under section 34 of the Environmental Protection Act 1990 and must be disposed of only by an "authorised person" (eg the operator of a licensed landfill site or an authorised incinerator).

Forestry

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what plans he has to provide financial assistance to the forestry industry to compensate for losses incurred as the result of foot and mouth disease restrictions; and if he will make a statement; [155784]

(2) what assessment his Department has made of the job losses in the forestry industry which will result from the foot and mouth disease outbreak; and if he will make a statement; [155783]

(3) what assessment he has made of the economic impact of the current foot and mouth restrictions on the forestry industry; what discussions he has had with the forestry industry; and if he will make a statement. [155782]

Mr. Morley: The Forestry Commission is gathering information on the impact on the forestry industry of foot and mouth restrictions. The Commission has had discussions with key sectors of the industry including a meeting, on 23 March, with representatives of England's woodland owners and managers.

Once the Forestry Commission has collected and analysed information regarding the impact of foot and mouth restrictions, we shall assess whether we should provide additional support for the forestry industry. I have discussed the effects of the foot and mouth outbreak with the Forestry Commission on several occasions, and the Rural Task Force, of which I am a member, has also received representations direct from the forestry industry.

Agricultural Hereditaments

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what has been the rise in the value of agricultural hereditaments since 1980. [147492]

Ms Quin [holding answer 29 January 2001]: This information is not available. Agricultural hereditaments are exempt from rating and consequently they have not been valued. We have attempted to estimate the value of agricultural hereditaments for rating purposes on several previous occasions. However these calculations rely on a number of assumptions and are constrained by the availability of information on the value of agricultural properties at the time the calculation was made. Further, the basis used to calculate business rates has changed since 1980. As a result our previous calculations do not provide a reliable basis for estimating the increase in the notional value of agricultural hereditaments over a period of time.

Slaughter Costs

Mr. Baker: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what recent studies his Department has made of the average cost of slaughtering a lamb in an abattoir in each of the EU member states; and if he will make a statement. [153267]

Ms Stuart [holding answer 12 March 2001]: I have been asked to reply.

The Department has undertaken no such studies. Slaughter costs reflect a number of factors, including size and efficiency of operations, and are therefore commercial matters.

Written Answers to Questions

Friday 6 April 2001

PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL

Peerages

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the President of the Council how many applicants for a people's peerage are under (a) 25 and (b) 30 years. [157254]

Mrs. Beckett: I understand from the House of Lords Appointments Commission that there were (a) 22 and (b) 77.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the President of the Council how many applicants for a people's peerage are over (a) 65, (b) 70, (c) 75 and (d) 80. [157255]

Mrs. Beckett: I understand from the House of Lords Appointments Commission that there are (a) 696 of whom, (b) 309 are over 70, (c) 121 are over 75 and (d) 31 are over 80.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the President of the Council if she will list the regional backgrounds of aspiring people's peers who appear in the column 'other' on the Commission's website. [157253]

Mrs. Beckett: I understand that those listed as 'other' in the House of Lords Appointments Commission website are nominees not resident in the UK at present. They are either British citizens currently living abroad, Commonwealth citizens or Irish citizens. They do not therefore have a regional background.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the President of the Council if she will list the questions for answer by her which she has not answered on the grounds of disproportionate cost in the 2000-01 session. [157169]

Mrs. Beckett: Two. Questions answered on 16 March 2001, Official Report, column 764W, and 22 March 2001, Official Report, columns 314–15W.

PRIME MINISTER

Wal-Mart

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Prime Minister on what dates between 1 January and 31 July 1999 he met representatives of the Wal-Mart company; and whom he met from the company on each occasion. [157325]

The Prime Minister: I have meetings with a wide range of organisations and individuals. As with previous Administrations it is not my practice to provide details of all such meetings.

Foot and Mouth

Mr. Cash: To ask the Prime Minister if he will hold a public inquiry following the elimination of foot and mouth disease into the causes of the disease and the Government's handling of its consequences. [157612]

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the right hon. Member for Tonbridge and Malling (Sir J. Stanley) on 5 April 2001, Official Report, column 251W.

Identity Cards

Mr. Liddington: To ask the Prime Minister (1) what studies are being undertaken by the Performance and Innovation Unit into the possibility of a national identity card; [157349]

(2) what consultations have been carried out in the past 12 months by the Performance and Innovation Unit about the possibility of a national identity card. [157346]

The Prime Minister: The PIU have not carried out any formal consultation about the possibility of a national identity card.

In September last year, I asked the PIU to undertake a project looking at privacy and data issues. Lord Falconer, Minister of State in the Cabinet Office, is the Sponsor Minister for the project.

The project is analysing a broad range of issues involved in privacy and the use of personal data, including current government, private sector and international practices, structural and technological issues, public attitudes and the current legal framework. The project is also examining a range of issues to do with identification and authentication, including identification numbers and smartcards.

Meetings

Mr. Wilkinson: To ask the Prime Minister on what occasions and where since 3 May 1997 he has met the creators of charitable foundations; what the purposes of such meetings were; and what their outcomes were. [157258]

The Prime Minister: I have meetings with a wide range of organisations and individuals. As with previous Administrations it is not my practice to provide details of all such meetings.

DEFENCE

Reservists

Mr. Laxton: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about the call-out of reservists for operations in the Balkans and the region of Iraq. [157797]

Dr. Moonie: Since NATO operations commenced in the former Yugoslavia, the reserve forces have historically provided some 10 per cent. of the total manpower in theatre. A further call-out order has been made under section 54 of the Reserve Forces Act 1996 to allow members of the reserve forces to continue to be called out to support operations in Yugoslavia and in the region of Iraq. As in previous years, only volunteers for these duties will be called out. The new call-out order has effect until 31 March 2002.

Joint Strike Fighter

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what representations he is making to the US Administration to ensure that the US maintains its commitment to the Joint Strike Fighter project; [156335]

(2) what recent discussions he has had with the US Defense Secretary on the Joint Strike Fighter project; [156334]

(3) what estimate he has made of the number of UK jobs which will be created by the Joint Strike Fighter aircraft project; [156336]

(4) what assessment he has made of the prospects for continuing with the Joint Strike Fighter project without US support; [156337]

(5) what alternatives to the Joint Strike Fighter aircraft project his Department has assessed. [156338]

Mr. Hoon: The importance that the UK attaches to the Joint Strike Fighter (JSF) programme has been raised regularly with the United States Administration in UK/US ministerial meetings. I took the opportunity to reinforce this message with Secretary Rumsfeld during my recent visit to the US.

We estimate that up to 5,000 jobs may be created or sustained as a result of the UK's involvement in the next phase (Engineering and Manufacturing Development) of the JSF programme.

The alternative options considered by the UK to meet its future requirement were the US F/A18E, the French Rafale, a navalised version of the Eurofighter and an advanced Harrier variant.

The JSF is a US led project. I would not expect it to continue should the US Government decide to cancel it.

Weapons Training

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many places were available in (a) March 2000 and (b) March 2001 on courses for HM forces on (i) improvised explosive device disposal, (ii) explosive ordnance device driver courses and (iii) biological and chemical munition disposal; and how many (A) applied for, (B) were accepted to and (C) completed each course. [156215]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 30 March 2001]: This type of training is carried out at three Army Training and Recruiting Agency (ATRA) Schools: the Defence Explosive Ordnance Disposal School (DEODS) at Chattenden in Kent, The Army School of Ammunition (ASA) at Kineton, Warwickshire and the Defence School of Transport (DST) at Leconfield, Yorkshire. Biological and chemical munitions disposal is taught as part of other courses at the ASA. Similarly, IEDD training forms part of courses run at both DEODS and ASA. Driver training for EOD Van Drivers is taught at the DST.

Courses run throughout the year and information for courses running at any point during March each year is given in the table.

Strategic Defence Initiative Contracts

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the contracts awarded since 1 September 1998 under the Letter of Offer and Acceptance, 0006–98-C-0015, signed under the 1985 Strategic Defence Initiative Memorandum of Understanding, specifying in each case the name of the contractor, the value of the contract and the date of the award. [157281]

Mr. Hoon: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him on 28 March 2001, Official Report, column 620W.

Technology Readiness and Risk Assessment Programme

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) when the Technology Readiness and Risk Assessment Programme is expected to be completed; and if he will publish an unclassified version of its conclusions when it is completed; [157344]

(2) if he will place in the Library copies of unclassified documents which have been (a) issued to the contractors and (b) made public during the Technology Readiness and Risk Assessment Programme. [157401]

Mr. Hoon: The Technology Readiness and Risk Assessment Programme is planned for completion in the autumn of 2001. An unclassified summary of the report will subsequently be published and a copy will be placed in the Libraries of the House. The only unclassified document made available to contractors and made public, is that covering the Terms of Reference. In this regard I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to the hon. Member for Salisbury (Mr. Key) on 27 July 1999, Official Report, column 203W.

Nuclear Warheads

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence in which locations nuclear warheads withdrawn from active service are stored; and if he will make a statement on the use to which nuclear material recovered from redundant warheads is put. [156376]

Mr. Hoon: Nuclear warheads are stored at Faslane and Coulport, before they are returned to the Atomic Weapons Establishment for dismantling.

Nuclear material retained for defence purposes, including that recovered from redundant warheads, is recycled within the UK's defence programme. Nuclear material recovered from redundant warheads which is surplus to defence needs either has been or will be transferred into safeguard arrangements and will be subject to inspection by the International Atomic Energy Agency.

Territorial Army Reserve

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will list (a) the designated strength and (b) the number enlisted in each battalion or unit of the Territorial Army Reserve; what action is being taken to fill vacancies; and if he will make a statement; [157090]

(2) how many members of the Territorial Army Reserve attached to units which were disbanded under the Strategic Defence Review (a) transferred to other Army TA units, (b) transferred to other reserve occupations and (c) joined the services full time; how many left the TA; and if he will make a statement. [157091]

Dr. Moonie: I will write to the hon. Member and a copy of my letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what the designated strength of the Territorial Army Reserve is; and what the number enlisted is. [157092]

Dr. Moonie: The latest available figures give the numbers enlisted into the Territorial Army as 40,684 against an establishment of 41,204.

Foot and Mouth

Mr. Duncan Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many members of the armed forces were deployed in the first instance in support of the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food to deal with the foot and mouth outbreak; and how many members of the armed forces were so deployed on 3 April. [157418]

Mr. Spellar: In response to initial requests from the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (MAFF), a small number of military specialists—vets and logistic planners—were deployed on 16 March to help in dealing with the foot and mouth outbreak. Since then, the armed forces have continued to respond to further requests for support. The total number of troops deployed as at 3 April was 1,544. Additional troops are on reduced notice to move, pending further requests for assistance.

Atlantic Star

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will seek advice from his Department's Historic Branch on the contribution made in the battle of the Atlantic by the Polar Bears, in securing Iceland in 1941, and on whether they are entitled to the Atlantic Star. [157420]

Dr. Moonie: The men of the 49th West Riding Division whose divisional sign was a Polar Bear, formed the core of the British garrison of Iceland between the late spring of 1941 until the end of 1942 when responsibility for the garrison passed wholly to the United States forces who began to arrive there in the summer of 1941.

The securing of Iceland by this garrison made possible the subsequent basing there of Allied aircraft to carry out anti-submarine patrols and thus provide further support to the Allied convoys on which so much depended. Further, the island was used as an assembly point for convoys to Russia.

However, the land garrison did not participate directly in the operations contributing to the Battle of the Atlantic, and accordingly land service on Iceland was not included among the categories of service conferring eligibility for the Atlantic Star. This campaign award and the other Campaign Stars and War Medals, were considered by the Inter-Departmental Committee on the Grant of Honours, Decorations and Medals for the 1939–45 War and subsequently agreed by the King.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will seek advice from his Department's Historic Branch on the contribution made by 269 Squadron while operating out of Iceland in securing the Enigma code technology from a captured U-Boat; and if Squadron members are entitled to the Atlantic Star. [157419]

Dr. Moonie: Number 269 Squadron made a distinguished contribution to the Battle of the Atlantic, including sinking several enemy submarines and playing a major role in the capture of U-570 in August 1941. The surrender of U-570 did produce valuable intelligence on enemy submarines. Unfortunately, the unavoidable lapse in time between the surrender of the vessel to 269 Squadron and the arrival of a Royal Navy surface warship allowed the U-boat crew to throw overboard, or otherwise destroy, all the submarine's Enigma equipment and codebooks.

Members of 269 Squadron who meet the necessary qualifying criteria are eligible for the award of the Atlantic Star.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if the Minister for Veterans' Affairs will meet representatives of the 49th Infantry Division Association to discuss members' entitlement to the Atlantic Star. [157421]

Dr. Moonie: The basic qualifying criteria for Second World War medals were agreed by the Inter-Departmental Committee on the Grant of Honours, Decorations and Medals in 1946. It would not be appropriate to attempt to review, with a view to altering contemporary decisions, events which happened more than 50 years ago. A meeting with the members of the 49th Infantry Division Association would not, therefore, be helpful to them.

Medal entitlement is examined on an individual basis. Members of the 49th Infantry Division Association who feel that they are entitled to the Atlantic Star should write, individually, to the Army Medal Office enclosing as much information concerning their service as possible. Their case will then be considered.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what criteria were laid down for service men and women to be entitled to the Atlantic Star; and if he will make a statement. [157417]

Dr. Moonie: The qualifying criteria for the campaign stars and medals instituted for service during the Second World War, including the Atlantic Star, were published by the Inter-Departmental Committee on the Grant of Honours, Decorations and Medals in Command Paper 6633 in May 1945 and amended by Command Paper 6833 in June 1946. Copies of both these documents are in the Library of the House.

Iraq

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if bombs coated with depleted uranium were used in the most recent bombing of Iraq; and if he will make a statement. [157415]

Mr. Hoon: Bombs coated with depleted uranium were not used on the most recent occasion that coalition aircraft patrolling the southern no fly zone responded in self-defence against the Iraqi Air Defence System.

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the reasons for the most recent bombing of Iraq by the UK and USA. [157414]

Mr. Hoon: Coalition aircraft carrying out legitimate patrols of the Iraqi no fly zones are authorised to respond in self-defence to Iraqi efforts to shoot them down. This is the only basis on which weapons have been released over Iraq since-Operation Desert Fox in December 1998.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Sudan

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what discussions she has had with (a) her EU counterparts and (b) the UN concerning World Food Programme supplies for Sudan. [156895]

Clare Short: My Department is in regular contact with (a) the EU in Brussels, both the European Community Humanitarian Office (ECHO) and the Food Aid Unit, about their plans for food aid to Sudan this year: We have also discussed Sudan with (b) the UN and World Food Programme (WFP) in London, Rome and Khartoum. WFP have asked for 150,000 metric tonnes and we expect a substantial part of this to be provided by contributions from EU member states and the United States. We understand the European Commission will make available 12,000 tonnes for drought and related needs in the north.

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will list her Department's contributions to the World Food Programme earmarked for Sudan since 1997. [156892]

Clare Short: Since 1997, the Department for International Development has earmarked £14.4 million for Sudan through the World Food Programme. This contribution was disbursed over 1998 and 1999. No contribution was considered necessary in 2000. We are considering our response in 2001 as the humanitarian situation demands.

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make a statement on current food deficit levels in Sudan. [156896]

Clare Short: There are indications there may be food shortages in some part of Sudan this year. We are monitoring the situation closely both from London and through our DFID representative at the British Embassy in Khartoum. My humanitarian adviser will also be visiting Sudan in May to assess needs and make recommendations.

Philippines

Mr. Purchase: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make a statement on the approval by her Department of the National Roads Bridge Replacement Project in the Philippines. [157855]

Clare Short: I have recently agreed a commitment of DFID funds of up to £8.75 million to this project. This will be the final project funded under the Aid and Trade Provision (ATP).

The 1997 White Paper on International Development committed the Government to focus all future development assistance on poverty reduction, and, therefore to end the ATP scheme.

We also agreed to honour ATP commitments already made and to do our best to make them more poverty focused. This project will improve routes passing through poor rural areas of the Philippines.

Departmental Procurement

Dr. Naysmith: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what progress has been made on untying her Department's procurement following the White Paper commitment. [157796]

Clare Short: DFID is untying by applying the Public Procurement Regulations from 1 April to invite global competition for all new contracts above a threshold value of £93,896. Implementation will be a challenge and we have agreed to share the practical lessons with other development agencies in line with our commitment to international untying. The new policy will not disrupt current programmes. For this financial year only, DFID will consider extension to current contracts where that is necessary for operational reasons and the initial invitation to tender made it clear that a contract may be extended.

Zimbabwe

Mr. Purchase: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she has recently reviewed the effectiveness of United Kingdom development efforts in Zimbabwe. [157802]

Clare Short: I have since 1997 kept our development programme in Zimbabwe under regular review. We remain committed to helping the poorest in Zimbabwe who are suffering the combined effect of economic mismanagement and the HIV/AIDS pandemic. But the situation in Zimbabwe is difficult and we continue to work only where we are confident our support can be effective.

For this reason we have today written to the Zimbabwe Government informing them that we are ending our support to the Privatisation Agency of Zimbabwe and to a Trade Policy Capacity Building Programme. In the continued absence of Government policies likely to reverse current economic decline and reduce poverty, I concluded that these projects were likely to have little beneficial impact for the people of Zimbabwe.

Micro-finance Institutions

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what action her Department is taking to encourage access to micro-finance institutions in developing countries. [156598]

Clare Short: Gaining access to simple, low cost savings and insurance services helps poor families in developing countries to reduce their vulnerability to economic shocks. Small-scale loans from micro-finance institutions (MFIs) also play a very important role in encouraging entrepreneurs to invest in their business, where they are unable to obtain a loan from a conventional commercial bank.

Despite the success of many MFIs in extending savings and credit sustainability to the poor, these services still reach only a tiny proportion of those that need them. Recognising the importance of MFIs in reducing poverty, DFID provides technical and financial support to raise standards in micro-finance, to improve commercial viability, and to extend outreach to millions more poor families. This support is provided in a number of ways.

DFID is a founding member of the Consultative Group to Assist the Poorest (CGAP). CGAP is an international coalition of donors and practitioners working to improve the quality and scale of micro-finance services worldwide, through the development and dissemination of best practice.

DFID supports a large number of MFIs directly, including BRAC and PROSHIKA in Bangladesh, FINCA in Tanzania and KASHF in Pakistan.

DFID also encourages innovation in the provision of financial services to the poor. It supports a micro-leasing company in Uganda, and the replication of indigenous savings methodologies through MFIs in east and southern Africa under the "MicroSave" initiative.

Finally, DFID strengthens links between MFIs and mainstream capital markets—whether commercial banks or equity investors—so as to mainstream micro-finance in the financial markets of developing countries.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Mercenaries

Mr. Bruce George: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when the Green Paper on mercenaries will be published; and what are the reasons for the delay. [156151]

Mr. Battle: Unfortunately, it proved impossible to publish the Green Paper on mercenary activity as expected by the end of November 2000.

The issue is a complex one. It is important therefore to work carefully through the details. I can assure the House that work on the Paper is continuing.

Private Military Companies

Mr. Bruce George: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what contacts officials in his Department have had with representatives of private military companies since guidelines were introduced as a result of the Legg Inquiry. [156152]

Mr. Battle: There is no accepted definition of a private military company. Since guidance was introduced, contacts have been recorded with 15–20 companies which may be judged to fall within the category of private military/security companies. These have been principally inquiries regarding general HMG policy towards particular parts of the world.

Mr. Bruce George: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what estimate he has made of the number of private military companies that are operating out of the UK. [156153]

Mr. Battle: Due to difficulties of definition, the possible blurring of boundaries between private military companies and private security companies, and the frequent shift of company identities and locations in this sector, there is no current definitive estimate of the number of private military companies operating out of the UK.

Sri Lanka

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Sri Lankan authorities concerning the attack on 18 February upon a Christian church in the Hingurangoda district of Sri Lanka; and if he will make a statement. [157243]

Mr. Wilson: We condemn all such acts of violence against civilians wishing to exercise their right to religious freedom. We are pleased to see that the Sri Lankan Government have condemned this unprovoked attack and that the President has ordered an immediate inquiry. We hope that this will be completed soon and that it will be open and transparent.

British Forces' Detention (Soviet Union)

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what investigations have been made in collaboration with the Commonwealth of Independent States on the detention of members of the British Forces in the Soviet Union after (a) the Second World War and (b) the Korean War; and if he will make a statement. [156772]

Dr. Moonie: I have been asked to reply.

Advantage was taken of the changed climate at the end of the Cold War to liaise with the Russian authorities on whether they possessed information on the few British Service men whose fate as prisoners of war remains unknown following the Second World War and Korean War, in spite of extensive investigation.

This and further detailed research into allegations that British Service men were detained by the Soviet Union after the Second World War has revealed no evidence that the Soviet authorities had a policy of detaining British Service men. Equally, no evidence has been found that British prisoners of war were detained in Korea or elsewhere after the post-armistice repatriations at the end of the Korean War.

TREASURY

Opinion Polling

Mr. St. Aubyn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what (a) quantitative and (b) qualitative analytical work Her Majesty's Treasury has commissioned from GGC/NOP since 1 May 1997; and what was (i) the cost of the contract and (ii) the specific nature of the work commissioned. [155661]

Mr. Andrew Smith [holding answer 28 March 2001]: None.

Resource Accounts

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer on what date the resource accounts for each class for 1999–2000 were laid before Parliament; and from what date in each case copies were available to hon. Members in the Vote Office. [155444]

Foot and Mouth

Sir Michael Spicer: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if roll-over relief is available to farmers receiving lump sum compensation for foot and mouth disease who wish to reinvest in livestock in future years. [156900]

Mr. Andrew Smith [holding answer 5 April 2001]: Animals used in a farming trade are not chargeable assets for capital gains purposes. They are part of a farmer's trading stock so that any compensation for their loss will be on revenue rather than capital account and form part of the farmer's trading income.

Compensation received for animals that have been compulsorily slaughtered is treated in the same way as the proceeds would have been if the animals had been sold. As this is income for tax purposes capital gains tax roll-over relief is not applicable.

Where the herd basis applies, the profit from the disposal of production animals is deferred until they are replaced and the profit is exempt if they are not replaced. Special rules allow profits on the disposal of other animals compulsorily slaughtered to be spread over three years.

The Revenue and Customs are committed to helping individuals and businesses in difficulty as a result of the foot and mouth outbreak. They will respond sympathetically in all cases where customers need help in understanding their entitlements or who are experiencing difficulty in paying tax or national insurance. The Revenue Departments have set up a joint helpline. The number is 0845 300 0157.

Mr. Chope: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if applications for temporary rate reductions made because of the foot and mouth epidemic will be given priority over outstanding appeals against the 2000 rating list; [157380]

(2) what targets have been given to the Valuation Office for determining applications for temporary reductions in business rates on the grounds of the impact of the foot and mouth crisis; [157381]

(3) how many applications have been made for a temporary reduction in business rates arising from the foot and mouth epidemic. [157382]

Dawn Primarolo: In England and Wales to date there have been at least 23,000 appeals made for a temporary reduction in rating assessments on the grounds of the impact of foot and mouth. It will be the Valuation Office Agency's policy to prioritise dealing with such applications. The Valuation Office Agency has recently introduced a system for the structured programming of appeals against rating assessments. As a matter of urgency it is considering how, within this system, to prioritise appeals resulting from the foot and mouth epidemic.

R and D Tax Credit

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many firms have taken advantage of the research and development tax credit for small and medium-sized enterprises. [157387]

Mr. Timms: Figures for the number of firms that have taken advantage of R and D tax credits will not be available until 2002, when firms incurring R and D expenditure have sent in their tax returns for the first year of operation of the scheme. However, enhanced capital allowances since 1997 and new tax credits to encourage investment and innovation have already saved business over £1 billion.

European Community (Contributions)

Mr. Gerald Howarth: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what the total value was of the rebates on the UK's contributions to the EEC budget secured by Governments between 1979 and 1987. [157375]

Miss Melanie Johnson: Details of the United Kingdom's abatement for the years 1985–86 to 1987–88 can be found at Table 20.1 of "The Government's Expenditure Plans 1990–91 to 1992–93" (Cm 1018, January 1990). Details of negotiated refunds for the years

National Minimum Wage

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what estimate he has made of the additional income received by residents of Cunninghame, South constituency following the introduction of the national minimum wage; [157396]

(2) how many residents of Cunninghame, South constituency (a) have benefited from the introduction of the national minimum wage and (b) will benefit from the rise in the level of the national minimum wage. [157397]

Mr. Timms: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the National Statistician. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Len Cook to Mr. Brian H. Donohoe, dated 6 April 2001:

As National Statistician, I have been asked to reply to your recent questions about the benefits of the National Minimum Wage (NMW) in Cunninghame South constituency (157396, 157397).

The Office for National Statistics has published estimates of the number of jobs paid at less than NMW rates for 1998, 1999 and 2000. These estimates are based on an improved methodology using data from the New Earnings Survey (NES) and Labour Force Survey (LFS). This methodology provides the best estimates for the number of jobs in the UK paid below low hourly rate thresholds and was developed to overcome the deficiencies inherent in using the NES and LFS separately for measuring low pay.

Estimates for the United Kingdom and Government Office Regions are posted on the National Statistics website at:

www.statistics.gov.uk/nsbase/themes/labour_market/nmw_lowpay_tables.asp

Estimates based on this methodology are not available for the number of jobs paid below NMW rates at Parliamentary Constituency level.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Disability Living Allowance

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) how many recipients of Disability Living Allowance higher mobility component in Northern Ireland qualify because they are both blind and deaf; [157408]

(2) how many Disability Living Allowance recipients, whose main disability is deafness, are aged between 16 and 64 and live in Northern Ireland; [157410]

(3) how many Disability Living Allowance recipients there are in Northern Ireland, and how many there were in each of the last seven years, whose main disabling condition is deafness; [157405]

(4) if he will publish a breakdown of disability living allowance awards in Northern Ireland for which deafness is the main disabling condition by (a) the rate of each component and (b) age; [157407]

(5) if he will publish a breakdown of Disability Living Allowance awards in Northern Ireland for which deafness is the main disabling condition by (a) age and (b) type of award, indicating (i) care only components, (ii) mobility only components and (iii) combined care and mobility components; [157406]

(6) how many recipients there are in Northern Ireland of (a) higher and (b) lower rate Attendance Allowance. [157409]

Dr. Reid: Responsibility for this matter has now been devolved to the Northern Ireland Assembly and is therefore no longer a matter for the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland.

Fuel Poverty

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what considerations underlay the decision to exclude housing benefit and income support on mortgage interest from a household's income when determining whether that household suffers fuel poverty, as stated in Box 10.1 of The UK Fuel Poverty Strategy. [157452]

Dr. Reid: Responsibility for this matter has now been devolved to the Northern Ireland Assembly and is therefore no longer a matter for the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Ministerial Meetings

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many times (a) Lord Sainsbury and (b) other Ministers from his Department met with Nadhmi Auchi of General Mediterranean Holdings Ltd.; and if he will list the (i) dates and (ii) locations of those meetings. [156883]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 4 April 2001]: Lord Sainsbury has met Mr. Auchi on one occasion, at a dinner hosted by Mr. Auchi on 23 April 1999 at the Park Lane Hotel Piccadilly. The Department has no record of any other meetings having taken place between DTI Ministers and Mr. Auchi.

Departmental Policies (Amber Valley)

Judy Mallaber: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will set out, with statistical information relating as directly as possible to the Amber Valley constituency, the effects on Amber Valley of his Department's policies and actions since 2 May 1997 [157135]

Mr. Caborn: The constituency of Amber Valley has benefited from a range of initiatives since May 1997 including:

Regional Selective Assistance

A discretionary grant which provides assistance towards capital projects which would not otherwise go ahead and will create or safeguard employment in an Assisted Area. Grant totalling £3,405,000 has been offered to 10 companies supporting total capital expenditure of £19,126,000 with the aim of safeguarding 559 existing full time jobs and creating in excess of 160 new full time jobs.

Smart

Discretionary grant available to SMEs to help them develop technologically innovative products and processes. Grant totalling £643,819 has been offered to nine projects supporting total project costs in excess of £1,822,000.

Enterprise Grant

A new discretionary grant introduced in 2000. Provides support to SMEs investing in capital projects which would not otherwise go ahead. Grant totalling £286,389 has been offered to eight businesses supporting project costs in excess of £2,258,000.

Business Link

The Business Link network provides a wide range of business advice and support to SMEs. It is not possible to accurately isolate Business Link data for the Amber Valley constituency area. However, from 1997 to date, Business Link South Derbyshire, which includes the Amber Valley constituency, has helped a total of 2005 businesses and assisted 668 business start ups.

Gibraltar

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what representations he has received regarding using the Gibraltar international direct dialling code prefix 350; [156129]

(2) if he will make a statement on the arrangement set in place to handle internationally dialled telephone calls to Gibraltar using the Gibraltar international direct dialling code prefix 350; [156133]

(3) what representations he has made to the European Commission regarding the handling of internationally dialled telephone calls routed through Spain and destined for Gibraltar. [156130]

Ms Hewitt: We remain deeply concerned about the unsatisfactory situation of telecommunications services in Gibraltar. Spain does not recognise Gibraltar's international direct dialling code (350). This code is however recognised by every other country in the world.

The Government of Gibraltar have brought to our attention the increasing problem of international calls from countries other than Spain failing to reach their destination in Gibraltar. Some calls from third countries are diverted via Spain by Lease Cost Routing technology, in order to reduce costs.

We are working hard to ascertain the exact cause of the problem of dropped calls, and to identify the best way forward. There are a number of possible technical and commercial considerations which need to be examined. We have drawn the situation to the attention of both the Spanish Government and the Commission, and will pursue the problem as a matter of urgency.

Digital Television

Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what impact the Office of Fair Trading inquiry into BSkyB will have on the timetable to switch off analogue television channels and accelerate the take-up of digital TV. [R] [157142]

Dr. Howells: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry is unable to comment on a Competition Act inquiry by the Office of Fair Trading while it is being undertaken. The Director General of Fair Trading expects to reach a view by this summer on whether or not an infringement decision should be issued against BSkyB.

Postal Services

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry who will represent the United Kingdom at the next meeting of the Council of the European Union (Transport and Communications); and what position the UK's representative will take on amending Directive 96/97/EC with regard to the further opening up to competition of Community postal services. [157391]

Mr. Alan Johnson: My hon. Friend the Minister of State for Small Business and E-Commerce represented the UK at this month's Transport and Telecommunications Council on 4–5 April 2001. There are no plans for a substantive discussion on the proposal to amend Directive 97/67/EC at this Council; this item is on the agenda for information only in order to provide a progress report and an indication of the Presidency's plans for taking forward the debate with the aim of achieving a political compromise at the Telecommunications Council to be held at the end of June. The UK supports the Presidency in its objective to work for an agreement on the further opening up to competition of Community postal services provided appropriate safeguards are in place to maintain the universal service at a uniform tariff.

Civil Aircraft Projects

Mr. Gerald Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how much Government aid has been granted by his Department, and its predecessor, in support of civil aircraft projects since 1971, excluding Airbus projects; and if he will set out the amounts (a) granted in respect of each project and (b) recovered by way of sales and licensing levies. [157377]

Mr. Alan Johnson: Since 1971 the following launch investment project (a) commitments and (b) amounts recovered, excluding Airbus projects, which the Government have made are as follows:

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Litigants in Person

Mr. Chope: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many civil actions, other than in the small claims court, have been commenced in each of the last five years by litigants in person. [157360]

Jane Kennedy: Figures showing the number of trials in the county courts conducted by litigants in person are set out in the table.

Litigants appearing in person during county court trials England and Wales figures, 1996–2000

Year	Number county court trials	Claimant	Defendant
Litigants in person
1996	19,608	2,400	3,550
1997	15,311	1,590	3,020
1998	14,202	1,080	1,900
1999	13,437	880	1,660
2000	15,397	1,230	2,280
Percentage in person
1996	19,608	12.2	18.1
1997	15,511	10.3	19.5
1998	14,202	7.6	13.4
1999	13,437	6.5	12.4
2000	15,397	8.0	14.8

Mr. Chope: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will publish guidance for those wishing to pursue civil claims as litigants in person which fall outside the scope of the small claims court. [157359]

Mr. Lock: The Court Service publishes a comprehensive series of leaflets, which explain basic court procedures starting from making a claim to enforcement procedures. They all include information that goes beyond the small claims procedure.

The leaflets are specifically aimed at litigants in person and use plain English in a question and answer format. Since the Court Service launched its Welsh Language Scheme on 9 August 2000 some Court Service leaflets are now also available in Welsh.

The leaflets are available free from any county court office or from the Court Service website. Advice agencies such as the Citizens Advice Bureaux also supply some Court Service leaflets to their customers.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

School Achievement Awards

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) when it was decided that improvement awards should be given to all schools showing an improvement of at least 2.2 in the Key Stage 2 average point scores between 1997 and 2000; and what consultation was carried out prior to deciding the criterion; [157357]

(2) when it was decided that improvement awards should be given to all schools at Key Stage 1 showing an improvement of at least 1.4 in the average point scores between 1997 and 2000; and what consultation took place with schools about the criterion for deciding awards; [157355]

(3) when it was decided that improvement awards should be given to all schools showing an improvement of at least 4.9 in GCSE/GNVQ average point scores between 1997 and 2000; and what consultation was carried out prior to deciding on the criterion; [157354]

(4) when it was decided that improvement awards should be given to all schools showing an improvement of at least 0.80 in Key Stage 3 average point scores between 1997 and 2000; and what consultation was carried out prior to deciding the criterion. [157356]

Ms Estelle Morris: We consulted relevant national bodies about the design of the School Achievement Awards Scheme in May and June last year. We proposed then, and confirmed in September, that about 30 per cent. of maintained schools in England would receive awards, that about three quarters of these awards would be for improvement, that schools would be ranked by the differences between their Key Stage test or GCSE/GNVQ average point scores in 1997 and 2000, and that improvement awards would be given to the highest ranking schools. The minimum increases in average point scores required for improvement awards were consequences of this process.

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make it his policy not to disadvantage schools which have been notified of a financial award by his Department which is based upon an administrative error; and if he will make a statement. [157385]

Ms Estelle Morris: As the hon. Member knows, a number of schools were incorrectly told that they would receive a School Achievement Award. We have made it clear to them that they will receive the financial value of the award.

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what estimate he has made of the cost of the error made by his Department in identifying schools which had won achievement awards in 2001. [157384]

Ms Estelle Morris: The cost of additional awards will be £1.9 million.

Sex Education

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what estimate he has made of the use of homosexual role-play in school sex education classes; and if he will make a statement. [156774]

Jacqui Smith: We have made no estimate of the extent of this type of role playing in schools; Ofsted have reported no such incidents. The Learning and Skills Act 2000 places a statutory duty on schools to protect pupils from inappropriate teaching and materials. Our Sex and Relationship Education guidance is clear that teachers should be able to deal honestly and sensitively with sexual orientation. There should be no direct promotion of sexual orientation.

Best Value

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what consultations were held between his Department and the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions about the content of Best Value Performance Plans required of local authorities. [156444]

Ms Estelle Morris: My Department has been consulted about published documents on Best Value, including the final version of the statutory guidance on Best Value Performance Plans in DETR Circular 10/1999. Officials from both Departments meet regularly to discuss the implementation of Best Value.

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to change the year of calculation for education targets in best value performance plans to a school year basis. [156441]

Ms Estelle Morris: Our aim in introducing best value performance indicators has been to minimise burdens on local authorities by linking them to existing data collection exercises. Some of the education performance indicators are calculated on a school year basis, apart from those for expenditure and for special education needs. Compiling these on a school year would create work for local authorities, and make education expenditure indicators out of line with those for other authority services. Furthermore, any significant change in calculation method would mean that local authorities lose historical trends over time.

Class Sizes (Shropshire)

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list for each year since 1992 the average primary school class size for schools in Shropshire; and if he will make a statement. [156568]

Ms Estelle Morris: The data requested have been placed in the Library.

Information on class sizes as at January 2001 will be published in a Statistical First Release 'Class Sizes in Maintained Schools in England January 2001' on 6 April.

The latest infant class size data for September 2000 were published in a Statistical First Release 'Infant Class Sizes in England 2000' on 1 November, copies of which are available from the Library, or alternatively can be accessed from the Department for Education and Employment statistical website www.dfee.gov.uk/statistics. Figures from this release show that since September 1998, 324,000 five, six and seven-year-olds have benefited from the Government's infant class size initiative. In September 2000, 30,000 children were in classes of 31 or more children, compared with 171,000 in September 1999. This demonstrates that the Government are delivering early our infant class size pledge, which is supported by some £620 million.

Teacher Training

Mr. St. Aubyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what proportion of those who completed a teacher training course were full-time teachers three years later in each of the last three years for which figures are available. [155649]

Ms Estelle Morris [holding answer 29 March 2001]: The information is in the table.

Percentage of teachers who were in full-time teaching in the maintained schools sector in the third year after completing their Initial Teacher Training

Year of completion of Initial Teacher Training	Percentage
1994	66
1996 (provisional)	66

The number of regular teachers (excluding short-term supply) in the maintained schools sector in England at January 2000 was 404,600, the highest for 10 years and 6,900 higher than January 1998.

There was a growth of 2,300 in the number of people recruited to train as teachers between 1999–2000 and 2000–01, the first such increase since 1992–93.

From April 2001 new graduate recruits can expect to earn £17,000 a year (up 6 per cent. from the previous year) and starting salaries in Inner London will rise to £20,000 (up 9 per cent. from the previous year).

Schools (Battersea)

Mr. Linton: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list the additional resources his Department has made available to schools in Battersea since 1997 according to sector; and under which scheme or fund they are provided. [154831]

Jacqui Smith: Information showing the schools in the Battersea constituency that benefited from capital investment under the New Deal for Schools is shown in Table A. These allocations formed part of the £4.651 million investment made so far in schools in the London borough of Wandsworth local education authority under the New Deal for Schools programme.

The New Deal for Schools was introduced as a new additional programme targeted specifically at addressing the backlog of urgent repairs in school buildings that had built up after 18 years of under-funding under the previous Administration. It has been in addition to other capital funds made available to the London borough of Wandsworth local eduction authority. In total, since 1997, the London borough of Wandsworth local education authority has received some £13.214 million of funding for capital investment in school buildings as shown in Table B.

Nationally, investment in school buildings has tripled from £683 million a year in 1996–97 to over £2 billion in 2000–01. It will be £3.5 billion in 2003–04, including grant, credit approvals and Private Finance Initiative credits. There will be central Government investment of £8.5 billion in school buildings in total from 2001–02 to 2003–04. Capital investment already allocated to the London borough of Wandsworth local education authority in 2001–02, including the increases announced by the Chancellor in the Budget statement of 7 March, amounts to £5.942 million.

I refer my hon. Friend to the letter sent to him by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State on 16 February for details of increases to revenue funding for schools in the London borough of Wandsworth. An extract of revenue funding allocated is shown in Table C. Information at constituency level or sector is not readily available.

Battersea Technology College

Mr. Linton: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what funding has been made available, listed by project and funding scheme, for pupils and teachers at Battersea Technology College, since 2 May 1997. [154820]

Ms Estelle Morris: Most funding provided by the Department is distributed via local education authorities. The initial budget share for 1998–99 to 2000–01 financial years made available by Wandsworth Local Education Authority to Battersea Technology College is set out in the table. Figures for 1997–98 are not readily available. In addition, Battersea Technology College received £40,000 School Standards Grant in 2000–01. It also received at least £218,069 in 2000–01 through the Standards Fund. Figures for payments through the Standards Fund are not available for 1998–99 and 1999–2000. The Department does not hold information relating to specific projects and project schemes made available at Battersea Technology College since 2 May 1997.

Circulars

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list by date the circular documents which have been sent by his Department to (a) local education authorities, (b) primary schools and (c) secondary schools since 1 May 1997; and how many pages each document contained. [148352]

Jacqui Smith [holding answer 2 February 2001]: Our monthly batched mailings to schools clearly distinguish between documents requiring action and those for guidance and information. Since May 1997 schools have had an average of one action document a fortnight during term time from DFEE. Many of these related to literacy and numeracy, teachers pay or funding improvements. Most items sent are for information only.

Since September 2000, we have sent less automatically to schools. Of the 47 documents sent to all primary schools since September 2000 only 11 required action. The main documents of substance were the guide to improve grammar teaching and the autumn package of benchmarking data on pupil performance.

The position for secondary schools was similar. Of the 48 documents sent since September 2000 only 11 required action. The main document of substance was the autumn package of benchmarking data on pupil performance.

The table shows for each school how many documents we sent to all primary or all secondary schools. Many documents went to both types of school and are counted in each list. The full list of titles is in the Library.

' 2000–01 to end March only

A list of documents sent to LEAs since March 2000 has also been placed in the Library. My answer to the hon. Member for Harrogate and Knaresborough (Mr. Willis) on 22 March 2000, Official Report, column 571W, gave the number of mailings prior to this date. Page lengths of mailings to LEAs are not recorded centrally.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Foot and Mouth (Tourism)

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what steps his Department is taking to convey accurate information to foreign tourists of the impact of foot and mouth disease on human health. [157026]

Janet Anderson: My Department is working closely with the British Tourist Authority (BTA) to ensure that the message that foot and mouth disease has no adverse effect on human health and that Britain is open to business is conveyed to overseas visitors. Where concerns have been expressed, BTA's overseas offices have held briefings for the local media and travel trade to provide accurate information and reassurance about travelling to Britain. Information is also available to overseas media and the public through BTA's overseas call and visitor centres.

BTA has been, and is continuing to monitor press and public opinion in all its key priority markets. On 20 March I visited New York to help spread the message that Britain is open for business and dispel all the rumours that had started appearing in the American national press about public safety.

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if compensation will be made available to non-rural tourism businesses that have been adversely affected by foot and mouth disease. [157050]

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what compensation will be made available to those in the tourist industry in (a) the Chorley area and (b) Lancashire following the foot and mouth outbreak. [157312]

Janet Anderson: My right hon. Friend the Minister for the Environment announced on 20 March a package of measures to help those adversely affected by the foot and mouth outbreak. The Government are considering the need for further measures in the light of the latest developments.

Wembley Stadium

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will make a statement on (a) the use of lottery money for the new Wembley Stadium and (b) the amount of lottery money proposed for the new Wembley Stadium. [157316]

Kate Hoey: Sport England have committed £120 million to the Wembley Stadium project. The bulk of this money—£103 million—was used to secure the purchase of the stadium site in January 1999.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what discussions he has held with the Cabinet Office on overseeing the new Wembley Stadium project. [157544]

Kate Hoey: No discussions have been held with the Cabinet Office about the Wembley Stadium project.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport (1) how often meetings are held between him and the Chairman of the new Wembley Stadium Company; [157317]

(2) when he last met the Chairman of the new Wembley Stadium Company. [157313]

Kate Hoey: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State and I meet Sir Rodney Walker from time to time to discuss a wide range of issues including his new responsibility as Chairman of Wembley National Stadium Ltd. as well as his other duties including that of Chairman of UK Sport. My right hon. Friend and I last met Sir Rodney on 1 February.

Tourism (Lancashire)

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will make a statement on the impact on tourism in Lancashire of the foot and mouth outbreak. [157311]

Janet Anderson: We are making inquiries of a range of tourism-related bodies to determine the impact of foot and mouth disease on tourism businesses. This research is at an early stage and therefore no figures are yet available. The English Tourism Council and the Regional Tourist Boards are also implementing research to assess the impacts at local level. However, the North West Tourist Board estimates that the potential impact on tourism income in the north-west is around £6 million and is threatening around 200 jobs per week. No figures relating specifically to Lancashire are available.

New Millennium Experience Company

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport when and how the papers of the New Millennium Experience Company will be opened for public scrutiny; and if he will make a statement. [157244]

Janet Anderson: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer I gave the hon. Member for Lewes (Mr. Baker) on 29 March 2001, Official Report, columns 715–16W.

Religious Broadcasting

Mr. Wilkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will take steps to end the BBC's monopoly of religious broadcasting. [157259]

Janet Anderson: All public service broadcasters are committed to carrying religious programming. Such programming is an important element of public service provision and the Government reaffirmed in the White Paper "A New Future for Communications", which was published on 12 December 2000, that it will continue to be so. The White Paper invited comments on whether the current restrictions on ownership of broadcasting licences by religious organisations should be relaxed in the new legislation, and the Government are currently considering the responses.

Mr. Wilkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport on what grounds Christian broadcasting organisations are not allowed access to the air waves in the UK; and if he will review the matter. [157260]

Janet Anderson: The Broadcasting Act 1990 disqualifies religious organisations from holding broadcasting licences, except where the regulators are satisfied that it is appropriate for such bodies to hold licences for licensable programme services, satellite television, or local analogue, cable or satellite radio services. The White Paper, "A New Future for Communications", which was published on 12 December 2000, proposed that religious organisations should also be allowed to hold local digital radio licences. These restrictions have been considered necessary to safeguard pluralism in the media and to avoid religious discrimination: capacity constraints mean that one religious organisation may be able to hold a licence where another may not. Nevertheless, the White Paper invited comments on whether these restrictions should be relaxed, and we are currently considering the responses.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Bereavement Benefits

Kali Mountford: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to ensure that widowers will get the new bereavement benefits from April. [157948]

Mr. Rooker: Bereavement Benefits will concentrate the help available where and when it is needed most: on immediate needs and on families with children. Men who are widowed on or after 9 April 2001 will be able to claim Bereavement Benefits. But existing widowed fathers, with children in full-time education whose wives died before that date, are also eligible to claim the new Widowed Parent's Allowance. Invitations to make a claim have been sent to over 13,000 men whose Child Benefit records indicate may be eligible.

We have publicised the new benefits through relevant leaflets, which are distributed to outlets such as local offices, advisory organisations and doctors' surgeries, and can be found on the internet at www.dss.gov.uk. Advertorials in magazine titles which men are likely to read are due to appear in June.

We have however identified an error in the legislation that will affect a small number of widowers who will inherit both SERPS and a contracted-out pension from their late wives. In line with normal practice the SERPS payment should be reduced to take account of a contracted-out pension paid by a private pension scheme. This is technically known as a contracted-out deduction, and is made because National Insurance rebates would have been received instead of National Insurance contributions being paid for a SERPS pension. The intention was to treat all widows and widowers equally, but for this group of widowers the contracted-out deduction cannot be made until the legislation is corrected.

We will correct the legislation at the first available opportunity so as to treat widows and widowers equally. Those affected will be informed from the outset of this error and that it is likely to be corrected by future legislation. They will also be informed that they will not be asked to repay the extra amounts.

Disability Living Allowance

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many Disability Living Allowance recipients, whose main disability is deafness, are aged between 16 and 64 and live in (a) England, (b) Wales and (c) Scotland. [157404]

Mr. Bayley: The information is in the table.

England	12,000
Wales	700
Scotland	1,300

Statutory Benefits (Crewe and Nantwich)

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people in the constituency of Crewe and Nantwich have been awarded (a) attendance allowance, (b) back to work bonus, (c) business start up, (d) child benefit, (e) child maintenance bonus, (f) child support maintenance, (g) cold weather payment, (h) community care grants, (i) council tax benefit, (j) disability living allowance, (k) incapacity benefit, (l) income support, (m) industrial injury disablement benefit, (n) invalid care allowance, (o) maternity allowance, (p) severe disablement allowance, (q) social fund crisis loans, (r) stakeholder pensions, (s) statutory maternity pay, (t) statutory sick pay and (u) winter fuel payments since May 1997. [156256]

Mr. Bayley: The information is not available in the format requested as information on awards of benefit at constituency level is limited. Such information as is available is in the table.

Benefit	Period	Number of awards
Attendance Allowance[1]	1 June 1997–30 November 2000	1,600
Council Tax Benefit[2]	April 1997—March 2000	8,100

[2] Information on awards of Council Tax Benefit is in respect of the Crewe and Nantwich borough council area. Figures are taken from the Housing Benefit and Council Tax Benefit Management Information System Quarterly Administration Returns. Data refers to benefit claims, which may be a single person or a couple.
[3] Figures are taken from the Matching Intelligence Data Analysis Service Winter Fuel Payment exercise and are rounded to the nearest hundred.
[4] The Winter Fuel Payment figures for 2000–2001 are provisional. They are taken from a payment run in November 2000 and will be an underestimate of the actual payments made.

Child Poverty (Shrewsbury and Atcham)

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many children lived in poverty in Shrewsbury and Atcham on (a) 1 May 1997 and (b) the latest available date; and if he will make a statement. [154655]

Mr. Bayley: Poverty and social exclusion are complex multi-dimensional issues, affecting many aspects of people's lives—including income, health, housing, the quality of their environment and opportunities to learn. There is no single measure that can capture the complex problems that need to be overcome.

However a number of these aspects have seen significant improvement in Shrewsbury and Atcham since 1997. Between February 1997 and August 2000 the number of children in families in receipt of out of work benefits has fallen from 3,100 to 2,300.

In Shropshire the proportion of 11-year-olds achieving level 4 or above at Key Stage 2 has risen in English from 62 per cent. in 1997 to 79 per cent. in 2000 and in mathematics from 61 per cent. in 1998 to 77 per cent. in 2000.

The annual report, "Opportunity for all", available in the Library, sets out and monitors the Government's strategy for tackling poverty and social exclusion.

Notes:

1. Out of work benefits include Income Support, Jobseeker's Allowance, Incapacity Benefit and Severe Disablement Allowance. Numbers on benefit are drawn from a 5 per cent. sample and are therefore subject to sampling error. Figures are rounded to the nearest hundred. Please note that any comparison of figures for February and for August may be affected by seasonal variation.

2. Information used in earlier replies only looked at Income Support and income based Jobseeker's Allowance. We now include all the key out of work benefits to give a fuller picture.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Foot and Mouth

Ms Oona King: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received from the RSPCA regarding animal welfare during mass slaughter programmes. [156967]

Mr. Morley: Mr. Chris Laurence, Chief Veterinary Officer of the RSPCA, wrote to my right hon. Friend the Minister on 22 March seeking assurances concerning the welfare of animals destined for slaughter as a result of FMD. Subsequently officials from the RSPCA have visited Great Orton on two occasions to witness the disposal of animals at risk from FMD. I understand that both were satisfied that the welfare of the animals prior to slaughter remained a primary concern of the teams involved in their disposal. I recently met the RSPCA and other welfare organisations to discuss slaughter and other welfare matters.

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action his Department is taking to relieve pressure from banks on farmers and businesses affected by the foot and mouth crisis. [155426]

Mr. Meacher: I have been asked to reply.

On behalf of the Rural Task Force I have met representatives of the clearing banks to discuss issues raised by the impact of foot and mouth disease on rural businesses.

The banks have made it clear to me that they understand the problems being faced by businesses from all sectors affected by the foot and mouth outbreak. Wherever possible they are keen to support their customers and any customers in difficulty or expecting problems to arise should contact their manager locally as soon as possible to discuss the options that may be available.

The banks have also told me that they recognise that there will be longer term viability issues for some businesses arising as a result of the foot and mouth outbreak and that they will be pleased to work with the Government's Small Business Service to explore options including extension of the scope of the Small Firms Loans Guarantee Scheme to assist businesses in these circumstances.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

South East England Development Agency

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what action he proposes to take following delays by SEEDA in its appraisal of SRB Round 6 projects; and if he will make a statement. [156686]

Ms Beverley Hughes: The Eastbourne Regeneration partnership "Reborn" was successful in its bid for Round 6 funding through the Government's Single Regeneration Scheme and was awarded £5 million by SEEDA in July 2000. The partnership, in common with all other partnerships, was required to show that each of the proposed projects could demonstrate sound financial viability and value for money. Thirteen projects were put forward by the partnership but were originally lacking in sufficient detail to meet the requirements of the SRB Scheme. Considerable time was spent by SEEDA with the partnership in addressing and resolving these issues. As a result of the additional time spent by SEEDA on these particular projects there have been delays elsewhere which SEEDA has also addressed.

I am satisfied that SEEDA has acted properly in ensuring that these projects meet the required standards specified in the SRB Scheme thereby ensuring the proper stewardship of public funds being invested in the region. I do not believe that there is any further action to take in this matter.

Sewage

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many projects to solve sewage problems have received EU financial support through Regulation (EEC) No. 1655/2000 of the European Parliament during (a) Phase 1, (b) Phase 2 and (c) Phase 3. [156737]

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: Three UK sewage projects have received funding from the LIFE Programme since it began in 1992. Two were funded during the first phase of the LIFE Regulation, which ran between 1992 and 1995. The third was funded during the second phase between 1996 and 1999. The third phase runs from 2000 to 2004. As yet no awards have been made during this phase.

In 1992 the LIFE Programme contributed euro 711.554 to a Wetland Reedbed Treatment of Sewage put forward by the Fife Regional Council. The project ran from January 1993 to March 1997. In the same year the programme contributed euro 352.537,28 towards a Continuous Microfiltration System put forward by a company called MEMCOR based in Derbyshire. This project ran from December 1992 to April 1996.

The third project was from a company called Montgomery Watson Ltd., in Buckinghamshire, and was funded in 1995. The project ran from April 1995 to April 1997, and the programme contributed euro 301.254,48. The project aimed to demonstrate a sustainable, affordable wastewater strategy using aquatic/marginal plants for smaller communities of the European Union, and was based in Northern Greece.

Further information about these projects and ones which have received funding in other member states can be found on the European Commission's website, where there is a searchable database with information about all 600 plus projects selected under LIFE I and II.

The website can be found at http://europa.eu.int/comm/life/envir/database.htm

Foot and Mouth

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his answer of 30 March 2001, Official Report, column 815W, on foot and mouth, if he will amend the criteria for entry on to the list of authorities able to give relief from business rates to include the incidence of foot and mouth cases within an authority's boundaries. [157088]

Mr. Meacher: I have agreed to keep under review the operation of the special grant for hardship rate relief scheme in relation to foot and mouth disease impacts and I will look at representations which individual authorities make on the scheme.

Tudor Court School, Chafford Hundred

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when the Health and Safety Executive last visited Tudor Court School, Chafford Hundred in Thurrock. [157068]

Mr. Meacher [holding answer 5 April 2001]: The Health and Safety Executive (HSE) has not inspected the Tudor Court School in Thurrock since it opened in 1992. However, following a subsidence incident in the school car park on 23 March 2001 the HSE contacted the local education authority, Thurrock council, to ensure immediate steps were taken to ensure the safety of pupils, parents and staff and make the subsidence area safe.

GM Crops

Joan Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will place in the Library a copy of the contract between his Department and the Centre for Ecology and Hydrology agreed in April 1999 concerning research that forms part of the farm-scale evaluation of GM crops in the UK. [157113]

Mr. Meacher: I have today placed in the Library a copy of each of the four farm-scale evaluation contracts. Certain personal and financial details relating to contractors' staff have been removed.

The farm-scale evaluations are being undertaken by a consortium of three contractors: the Centre for Ecology and Hydrology (CEH), the Scottish Crop Research Institute (SCRI) and the Institute of Arable Crops Research (IACR). CEH leads the consortium and is the main contractor for the maize and beet evaluations, sub-contracting some of the work to SCRI and IACR. Similarly, SCRI leads on the spring oilseed rape trials and IACR on the winter oilseed rape, with some work sub-contracted to the other members of the consortium.

The work is overseen by the Scientific Steering Committee. Following the pilot year, protocols for the work have been revised on the advice of the Committee. Details of the current protocols can be found in the six monthly reports produced by the research consortium and published on the Department's website.

Joan Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if a farmer chosen to take part in the farm scale evaluations of GM crops in the UK enters into a contract to grow and manage the field of GM and non-GM crop with (a) the Farming and Biotechnology Industry Body (SCIMAC) and (b) the chemical company that developed the GM crop involved. [157158]

Mr. Meacher: Farmers hosting Farm Scale Evaluations on their farm do so by arrangement with the company that holds the consent authorising the release of the GM crop. The companies involved are members of the industry umbrella group SCIMAC. The crops are grown in accordance with the conditions set out in the release consent for that crop.

Joan Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will place in the Library a copy of the voluntary agreement between his Department and the Farming and Biotechnology Industry Body concerning the farm scale evaluations of GM crops in the UK. [157112]

Mr. Meacher: I will ensure that a copy of the voluntary agreement with the Supply Chain Initiative on Modified Agricultural Crops (SCIMAC) on the conduct of the Farm Scale Evaluations will be placed in the Library. A copy can be found on my Department's website http://www.environment.detr.gov.uk/fse/scimac/agreement/index.htm.

GM Fish

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the research programmes into fish genetics that his Department has been involved with in the last 10 years. [157275]

Mr. Meacher: My Department has funded a desk study and scientific literature review at the Institute of Aquaculture, University of Stirling, to consider the environmental implications and risk assessment of GM fish. This work was published as a DETR report in November 1994; "Genetic Modification of Fish—a UK Perspective". ACRE has also published guidance (Guidance note 8, March 1997) for experimental releases and risk assessment of genetically modified fish.

Copies of both these publications are in the House of Commons Library.

Research into GM fish has increased steadily since the first published reports in 1985 and the technology now exists for the routine modification of a variety of fish species. Some modified traits may affect the ecological range of a fish species, for example increasing the temperature range in which they are able to survive and breed, or the rate at which the fish grow and mature. The implications of such changes would need to be carefully considered in the risk assessment before a release could take place.

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list comprehensive risk assessment programmes the UK has conducted, under EU Directive 90/220 into the implications for human health and the environment following the potential release of GM fish stocks involved in UK-funded research programmes. [157271]

Mr. Meacher: There have been no applications to release GM fish under Directive 90/220/EEC in the UK. However the environmental consequences of the farming of genetically modified fish have been considered by my Department and by the Advisory Committee on Releases to the Environment (ACRE).

The Department of the Environment published a research report on the "Genetic Modification of Fish—a UK Perspective" in November 1994. ACRE Guidance Note 8, issued in March 1997, provides guidance for experimental releases and risk assessment of genetically modified fish.

The publications offer detailed recommendations on approaches to risk assessment and risk management for GM fish, and for emergency control measures. Guidelines are also provided for carrying out monitoring during and after the release.

Copies of both these publications are in the House of Commons Library.

Air Pollution Control Residues

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what discussions he has had with EU officials about the pre-treatment and disposal of APC residue; and if he will make a statement. [157413]

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: Officials from my Department are engaged in ongoing discussions with EU officials on technical issues regarding the implementation of the Landfill Directive. The most recent meeting of the Technical Adaptation Committee where such matters are discussed took place on 3 April 2001. One of the issues that has been raised in the Committee is the circumstances under which wastes should be considered corrosive. Under the Directive, hazardous waste that is corrosive in the conditions of landfill, possibly including some air pollution control residues, is likely to be prohibited from landfill sites from July 2002.

Fly-ash

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to classify fly-ash as prohibited waste; and if he will make a statement. [157412]

Mr. Robert Anisworth: My Department is currently in the process of transposing the requirements of the European Landfill Directive into national law. Under these provisions, hazardous waste that is corrosive in the conditions of landfill, including some fly-ash, is likely be prohibited from landfill sites from July 2002. Most waste that is landfilled will need to be pre-treated in some way. This requirement will be phased in between 2002 and 2009.

Meat Hygiene Service

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many and what percentage of (a) fresh food outlets, (b) fresh food wholesalers and distributors and (c) fresh food processors were visited unannounced by environmental health officers or Meat Hygiene Service inspectors in each year since 1995. [145003]

Ms Stuart: I have been asked to reply.

Information in the form requested is not held centrally. The numbers of inspections and visits to food premises by United Kingdom local authorities is as follows:

	Number
1995	828,937
1996	827,035
1997	787,047
1998	745,601
1999	734,573

Variations over time in the number of inspections and visits may reflect a number of factors, including changes in the number of food premises and the risk-based frequency of inspections.

As part of the Food Standard's Agency's arrangements to strengthen its links with local authority enforcement, a programme of audits of local authority enforcement services has been introduced. The audits will include checks on the adequacy and effectiveness of local authority enforcement services.

In addition to local authority inspections, the Meat Hygiene Service attends licensed fresh meat and poultry slaughterhouses, cutting plants and cold stores for the purposes of enforcing meat hygiene and animal welfare legislation and carrying out meat inspection and meat marking. Attendance by approximately 1,600 inspection staff ranges from full time to weekly visits, depending on the type of licensed premises. MHS staff make no unannounced visits to licensed premises, except principal official veterinary surgeons, who visit to check the effectiveness of MHS staff in carrying out their duties.

Hon. Members' attention is drawn to the footnotes which accompany the table and which provide general background information on how the figures are compiled.

Member for Broxbourne of 27 September 2000, 24 October 2000, 22 November 2000, 22 December 2000 and 8 January and the written questions replied to on 23 January relating to Mr. Dino Costas of Goffs Oak, Hertfordshire. [151678]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 1 March 2001]: A reply to the hon. Member's letter was sent on 5 April 2001.

I apologise for the unacceptable delay in replying to the hon. Member's correspondence and the previous parliamentary question. I know the Department's Permanent Secretary/Chief Executive of the National Health Service has written to the hon. Member apologising for the unacceptable delay involved in replying to her correspondence. The hon. Member's constituent raised a number of sensitive issues, which required a full investigation to ensure the information provided was correct, ensuring the constituent received a full explanation. This involved liaising with two different health authorities and a number of different sections within these health authorities.

General Practitioners

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what mechanisms will be put in place to enable GP practices to demonstrate their competence to primary care trusts. [156734]

Mr. Denham: Primary care trust (PCT) core functions include the development of general practice and other primary care providers and those professionals working in primary and community care. The range of services developed will vary between PCTs. It is therefore for each PCT to develop its own incentive arrangements and a range of performance indicators to assess the development of practices and the services it provides.

As part of this the Prime Minister announced on 19 March an additional £100 million to invest in general practice and primary care. PCTs and primary care groups will need to agree objectives and targets with their constituent practices for the effective use of these funds that support improvement of services by skilled and competent primary care professionals.

Tuberculosis

Mr. Wilkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many isolation wards for the treatment of tuberculosis have been opened in NHS hospitals since May 1997; in which hospitals; and on what dates. [156535]

Yvette Cooper [holding answer 2 April 2001]: Information on the number of isolation wards in hospitals is not collected centrally.

Different levels of isolation are required depending on the infectious (or suspected infectious) nature of a tuberculosis case. Each patient is considered on a case-by-case basis and therefore, the need for isolation facilities is made at local level.

The Department has published recommendations on isolation in two documents. One in June 1996 "Recommendations for the prevention and control of tuberculosis at local level" and again in September 1998 in the document entitled "UK guidance on the prevention and control of transmission of HIV-related tuberculosis and Drug-resistant, including Multiple Drug-resistant tuberculosis".

HPV Testing

Dr. Gibson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if the pilot tests for HPV testing (a) have started on schedule and (b) are taking place in the originally announced locations; and when he expects the results to be published. [156745]

Yvette Cooper [holding answer 3 April 2001]: The human papilloma virus/liquid based cytology pilot started in March 2001, as planned. As previously announced, the three sites are Norfolk and Norwich, North Bristol and Newcastle.

The evaluation is in two phases. In May 2002 the United Kingdom national screening committee (NSC) will report to the National Institute for Clinical Excellence on liquid based cytology. In March 2003, the NSC will consider the full evaluation of human papilloma virus testing and liquid based cytology in cervical screening before reporting to Ministers. Decisions about publication will be made at that stage.

Cancer

Dr. Gibson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he plans to meet the European Standards in Cancer survival rates. [156746]

Yvette Cooper [holding answer 3 April 2001]: The National Health Service cancer plan has set out the actions and milestones that aim to deliver the fastest improvements in cancer services anywhere in Europe over the next five years. By 2010 we anticipate that our five year survival rates for cancer will compare with the best in Europe.

NHS Plan

Mr. Hammond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if the term "by 2006" used in the NHS Plan refers to 1 January 2006. [157087]

Mr. Denham: There are no references to the term "by 2006" in the National Health Service Plan.

Drug and Tobacco Dependency

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much central Government funding was specifically allocated for preventive and curative work in relation to (a) drug, (b) alcohol and (c) tobacco dependency in the last financial year. [156909]

Ms Stuart [holding answer 5 April 2001]: It is not always possible to distinguish between preventive and curative work in relation to substance misuse. Interventions may be undertaken with people who have some substance misuse problems but have not, or would not, necessarily develop dependency. In the financial year 2000–01, the following sums were allocated for work which can broadly be described as preventive and/or curative in relation to drug, alcohol, and tobacco dependency or misuse, by central Government:

£59 million drug misuse special allocation to health authorities for drug misuse services.

£25 million additional in year funding in relation to drug misuse, to increase treatment capacity, reduce drug related deaths, and extend targeted preventive programmes.

£20 million allocated for smoking cessation through health authorities.

£13.75 million allocated for anti-smoking education.

£6.78 million drug and alcohol specific and special grants allocated to local authorities for distribution to voluntary sector drug and alcohol treatment agencies.

£7.45 million for preventive activity in relation to drug misuse.

£1.86 million Section 64 General Scheme of Grants to the voluntary sector, covering a range of preventive and curative projects in relation to drug, alcohol, and tobacco dependency.

£0.6 million for preventive health promotion in relation to alcohol.

£0.5 million local grants scheme promoting development of primary care led alcohol services.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Home Detention Curfew Scheme

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimate he has made of the (a) number and (b) types of crime committed by prisoners released on the Home Detention Curfew Scheme while they are on the scheme which are not reported to the police; and if he will make a statement. [152694]

Mr. Boateng [holding answer 8 March 2001]: No data are collected on the number or type of offences which might be committed by prisoners released on Home Detention Curfew (HDC) but which are not reported by victims to the police. The British Crime Survey which measures crime against households and individuals—including incidents not reported to the police—shows that overall levels of crime in 1999, the year following introduction of the HDC scheme, were 10 per cent. lower than in 1997.

Departmental Advertising

Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what major advertising campaigns his Department is carrying out; and what the cost and duration of each is. [154266]

Mr. Straw [holding answer 19 March 2001]: My Department is not currently running any advertising campaigns.

The second phase of the vehicle crime reduction campaign finished on 31 March. The cost for this phase of the campaign was £4.4 million. The total cost for this campaign during 2000–01 is £8.67 million as outlined in a previous answer to the hon. Member for Bath (Mr. Foster) on 12 February 2001, Official Report, column 63W.

Foot and Mouth

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the meetings and conferences organised by his Department and agencies of his Department which have been (a) cancelled and (b) postponed owing to foot and mouth disease; and if he will make a statement. [155357]

Mr. Straw [holding answer 23 March 2001]: The information requested is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Immigration

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will make a decision in the application for leave to remain made by Mrs. Farmer of Babbacombe Road, Torquay (Ref. D 2599777). [156518]

Mrs. Roche: A decision has now been taken on Mrs. Farmer's application and notification of the decision has been sent to Mrs. Farmer's solicitors. I have arranged for a copy of the notification to be sent to the hon. Member.

Data Protection

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) which Government Departments pay to access information on the national change of address database; [156453]

(2) what the cost to public funds of accessing the national change of address database was in each year since 1995. [156455]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: It is a matter for individual Departments to provide the information requested. There are no central records kept in the Home Office of these costs and the information could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many people have lodged complaints with the Data Protection Registrar concerning information from the change of address database sold by the Post Office to third parties; [156456]

(2) if he will make it his policy to require the Data Protection Registrar to obtain the consent of an individual before information from the change of address database is sold on to third parties. [156454]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The Data Protection Registrar has been known since 30 January 2001 as the Information Commissioner. The Commissioner administers and enforces the Data Protection Act 1998 independently of the Government.

I have drawn the Commissioner's attention to these questions and I understand that she will be writing to my hon. Friend.

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many notifications there were to his Department in each year from 1997 to date of criminal convictions of asylum seekers resident in the United Kingdom. [157168]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The information is not available centrally.

The Home Office Court Proceedings Database does not hold information about the characteristics of individual cases apart from those that are evident from the description of the offence with which the defendant has been charged.

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what provision he has made for education materials to be made available in appropriate languages for asylum seekers held at Winchester prison. [157012]

Mr. Boateng [holding answer 5 April 2001]: Provision for education materials in appropriate languages is made available to detainees as and when the need arises. On arrival each detainee is offered an education induction involving an assessment and interview to find out what his needs are. The education department provides dictionaries, "English as a second language" packs, basic readers and cassettes and has recently employed an "English as a second language" teacher. The education department also provides detainees with information and advice about education and employment opportunities available on release.

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many asylum seekers are recipients of voucher-only support; and if he will make a statement. [157173]

Mrs. Roche: As at the end of February 2001, [1]11,630 asylum seekers (including dependants) were allocated voucher-only support by the National Asylum Support Service (NASS).

Young Offenders Institutions

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his oral statement of 13 February 2001, Official Report, columns 294–96, on young offenders institutions, what further consideration he has given to the availability of sanctions to deal with disorder and bullying by young persons in custody; and if he will make a statement. [157036]

Mr. Boateng [holding answer 5 April 2001]: The Prison Service and the Youth Justice Board for England and Wales (YJB) are working on a joint rewards and sanctions strategy. This emphasises the increased use of incentives which can encourage positive behaviour and be withdrawn when negative behaviour is displayed. The aim is to create a more direct link between individual target setting and compliance with institutional rules, which can in turn influence decisions regarding early and late release under the Detention and Training Order. Guidance will be issued to Governors and practitioners by July.

Appointments Committee

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will list the members of the Appointments Committee advising him on the selection of HM Chief Inspector of Probation and their current occupations; [157002]

(2) if he will list the members of the Appointments Committee advising him on the selection of HM Chief Inspector of Prisons and their current occupations. [157003]

Mr. Boateng [holding answer 5 April 2001]: The members of the Advisory Panel are Baroness Stern, former Director of the National Association for the Care and Resettlement of Offenders and Senior Research Fellow at the International Centre for Prison Studies; Lord Laming, former Chief Inspector of the Social Services Inspectorate and author of the Laming Report on Modernising the Management of the Prison Service; Sir Hayden Phillips, Permanent Secretary at the Lord Chancellor's Department and chair of the Panel, and Sue Street, Director of the Home Office's Criminal Policy Group.

In appointing Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Prisons and Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Probation, the guidelines of the Office of the Commissioner for Public Appointments are being followed.

Identity Cards

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what consultations the Government have carried out with the Scottish, Welsh and Northern Ireland authorities about the possible introduction of a national identity card; [157386]

(2) what his policy is towards the introduction of a national identity card. [157347]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: We believe that, at least for the time being, the costs and risks associated with the introduction of a national identity card would outweigh the benefits. During the assessment of the options there was consultation at official level with the Scottish, Welsh and Northern Ireland authorities; but we have not specifically sought the views of the Scottish Parliament or the Welsh or Northern Ireland Assemblies.

Freedom of Information Act

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will seek to extend the provisions of the Freedom of Information Act 2000 to include technical details of animal experiments; and if he will make a statement. [157423]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Technical details of animal experiments are likely to be covered by the prohibition on disclosure set out in section 24 of the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986. We will not provide public information which will compromise the personal security of scientists and researchers who have concerns about violent animal extremists. The current extremist activity makes it difficult to move on Freedom of Information.

Closed Circuit Television Initiative

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applications were received for the crime reduction programme closed circuit television initiative round 2; how many have been invited to bid for the final stage; and how many successful bids can be accommodated within the budget provision. [157383]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Under round 2 of the crime reduction programme's closed circuit television initiative over 800 initial funding applications worth more than £200 million were received from crime and disorder reduction partnerships. On 26 March, 339 schemes with a potential award total of around £108 million were shortlisted as suitable for further development. Within the budget provision there is scope for all of the shortlisted bids to be funded providing that proposals meet the necessary criteria as outlined in the initiative's prospectus.

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list, by county, those applicants who have been invited to the final bid stage of the closed circuit television initiative round 2. [157379]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Under round 2 of the crime reduction programme's closed circuit television initiative, 339 schemes with a potential award total of around £108 million were shortlisted as suitable for further development. A list, by county, of those applicants that have been invited to the final stage of the initiative has been placed in the Library.

Firearms (Police)

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will place a copy of the January 2001 Association of Chief Police Officers manual of guidance on the police use of firearms, in the Library. [157319]

Mr. Charles Clarke: A copy of this document in the version which is available to the public was placed in the Library on 20 February. Certain tactical and training information contained in the full manual must remain confidential because of its potential value to armed criminals.

Abandoned Vehicles

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to strengthen the powers of the police and local authorities to deal with illegally abandoned cars. [157257]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The Local Government Association has set up a working group, in partnership with the police and the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency, to look at the related problems of vehicle theft, vehicle excise duty evasion and abandoned vehicles. The Government will consider carefully any recommendations arising from the work of this group, including any proposals for additional powers to enable the police and local authorities deal more effectively with abandoned vehicles.

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many vehicles removed by (a) the police and (b) local authorities have been declared a hazard in the past five years. [157389]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The information requested is not collected or held centrally.

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many vehicle-keepers have been prosecuted for illegally abandoning their vehicles in the past five years. [157388]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The information requested is not available centrally.

Abandoning a motor vehicle is an offence under section 2 of the Refuse Disposal (Amenity) Act 1978, but information contained in the Home Office's Court Proceedings Database does not distinguish between motor vehicles, anything which formed part of a motor vehicle or anything other than a motor vehicle being abandoned. Nor does it distinguish vehicle keepers from other persons.

Persons proceeded against for all offences under section 2 of the Refuse Disposal (Amenity) Act 1978 in England and Wales are as follows:

Year	Number
1995	98
1996	77
1997	78
1998	71
1999	108

Figures for 2000 are not yet available.

Criminal Records Bureau

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will estimate the cost to public funds of exempting volunteers from fees for criminal record checks. [157348]

Mr. Charles Clarke: It remains our intention that the Criminal Records Bureau will be self-financing by means of the charges that it makes for the disclosures that it issues.

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action he is taking to ensure that information held by the Criminal Records Bureau is as accurate as possible before checks become available to employers; and if he will make a statement. [157171]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The Criminal Records Bureau (CRB) will rely on a number of data sources, according to the nature of the case. The CRB has been liaising with all those responsible for the data sources in question. We fully recognise, and entirely share, concerns that have been expressed about delays in inputting data on to the Police National Computer, and errors and omissions in some of the data. Indeed, these were highlighted by reports commissioned by the Government. We have been working closely with the Association of Chief Police Officers (ACPO), Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Constabulary (HMIC), the Police Information Technology Organisation (PITO), the Information Commissioner and other concerned parties to tackle these problems. Police forces are now working to a compliance strategy that has been drawn up by ACPO. This sets quantified performance indicators for key aspects of both quality and timeliness, including the prompt inputting of data both in the initial stages of a case and following the conclusion of trial proceedings. There are also agreed programmes to tackle backlogs. Performance data for all forces are being routinely collected by PITO, and HMIC will be auditing performance. HMIC will be disseminating to all forces, through conferences and other means, information on good practice in relation to business processes in order to eradicate avoidable delays. Work is also being undertaken to produce revised protocols for weeding out old records, and the development by PITO of programs for the automated implementation of these protocols will be given priority.

Chief Commissioner of the Metropolitan Police

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what investigation there has been of the aircraft accident involving the Chief Commisisoner of the Metropolitan Police by (a) the Air Accident Investigation Branch and (b) the Police; and if he will make a statement. [157362]

Mr. Charles Clarke: I understand that the circumstances surrounding the emergency landing made by an aircraft piloted by Sir John Stevens at Newcastle-upon-Tyne airport on 3 February have been investigated by the Air Accident Investigation Branch (AAIB) of the Department of Trade and Industry. The results of the AAIB investigation will be published in the AAIB monthly bulletin. There has been no investigation of the incident by Northumbria Police.

Firearms Compensation Payments

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on how many occasions his Department has accepted liability for interest on late firearms compensation payments. [157262]

Mr. Charles Clarke: None.

Road Traffic Penalties Consultation

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many responses he has received to the Road Traffic Penalties consultation paper; and when he will report on these to the House. [157416]

Mr. Charles Clarke: We have received approximately 1,100 responses to the consultation paper on Road Traffic Penalties. Some individuals have responded more than once, for example by e-mail, fax, letter or through their Member of Parliament. This duplication will be taken into account in the final collation of responses and the final number of respondents will be correspondingly lower. We hope to publish a report on the responses in the summer.

Huntingdon Life Sciences

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent investigations he has carried out into the activities at Huntingdon Life Sciences; and if he will make a statement. [157422]

Mr. Charles Clarke: A number of police forces in the Eastern Region are pooling resources and working together on investigations relating to attacks by animal extremists. This joint working includes investigating personal attacks on directors and shareholders of Huntingdon Life Sciences (HLS) and other research centres; a shared approach to preparations for national days of action at the HLS site and other sites in the affected force areas; investigating the organisers and other key individuals in the many cross-border demonstrations which take place; and linking evidence where necessary.

The Government are absolutely determined to tackle the sort of criminal behaviour perpetrated by animal rights extremists, many of whom do not hesitate to use violence and intimidation to achieve their aims. Both the Government and the police are determined to ensure that people should be allowed to go about their legitimate business without being subject to violence and intimidation. We are introducing a range of measures aimed at combating such intimidation, including important new provisions in the Criminal Justice and Police Bill currently before Parliament.

Prison Service

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many Prison Service establishments are over their certified normal accommodation levels; and if he will make a statement. [157170]

Mr. Boateng: At the end of February 2001, there were 53 establishments in which the population exceeded in use certified normal accommodation. The prisons concerned are listed in the table.

Sir George Young: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department since when Parliamentary draftsmen have been working on the Elections Bill. [157146]

Mr. Straw: Instructions were issued by officials on Sunday 1 April.

Welsh Assembly (Concordat)

Mr. McCabe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will publish the bilateral concordat between his Department and the National Assembly for Wales. [157795]

Mr. Straw: A bilateral concordat has been agreed between the Home Office and the Cabinet of the National Assembly for Wales and a copy has been placed in the Library. The concordat sets out working arrangements for consultation, exchange of information, finance, access to services, resolution of disputes and review of relations between the two organisations.

Written Answers to Questions

DEFENCE

Logistic Information Systems Agency

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the future status of the Logistic Information Systems Agency. [157803]

Mr. Spellar: As part of the restructuring of the Defence Logistics Organisation, the Logistic Information Systems Agency will cease to be a Defence Agency with effect from 1 April 2001. Its functions will then become part of the unified Logistic Applications Integrated Project Team (IPT) within the Defence Communication Services Agency. The removal of Agency status will avoid potential complications in the management arrangements for the new IPT. This is largely an administrative measure and will not, in itself, result in any geographical relocation or redundancies for staff.

Porton Down

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will order a public inquiry into the programme of human experiments at the Chemical Defence Establishment at Porton Down. [157299]

Dr. Moonie: No. A public inquiry could not answer the central question of whether volunteers had suffered unusual mortality or illness. Only an epidemiological study can do that. Advice from the Medical Research Council has been sought for the feasibility of such a study. Furthermore, Wiltshire Police are conducting an investigation into aspects of this programme. We already make available to the volunteers any information we possess which is relevant to their individual cases. We also plan to conduct further work as outlined in my answers to the hon. Member on 25 January 2001, Official Report, column 655W, 5 March 2001, Official Report, column 20W and on 26 March 2001, Official Report, column 525W.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if his Department has received a report from the Operation Antler team of the Wiltshire Police regarding its inquiries into allegations that the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment had experimented on NHS patients during the 1960s; and if he will make a statement. [157306]

Dr. Moonie: Allegations dating from 1970 that the Chemical Defence Establishment conducted experiments during the 1960s on old and sick NHS patients who were subsequently put to death were thoroughly investigated at the time. The then Minister for Defence Equipment and the Prime Minister both refuted these allegations on 30 January and on 19 February 1970 respectively. Following inquiries by the Wiltshire police in January 2001, the Operation Antler inquiry advised my Department's officials that these allegations were in one case fabricated, and in another case did not involve Ministry of Defence staff.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many former service volunteers have visited the Chemical Defence Establishment at Porton Down to inspect records of their experiments and discuss their tests with member of staff since 1 January 1998. [157300]

Dr. Moonie: All former service volunteers who inquire about their participation in studies at the Chemical Defence Establishment are invited to visit Porton Down to view the original record books and discuss their experiences with current members of Porton Down staff.

In the period 1 January 1998 to 6 April 2001, 25 former service volunteers have visited to inspect the records of the studies they were involved in.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many times since 1 March 1998 the Chemical Defence Establishment at Porton Down has supplied information about former volunteers to the War Pensions Agency in response to a claim by such. [157329]

Dr. Moonie: Since 1 March 1998, the staff at the Chemical and Biological Defence Sector at Porton Down have supplied information in response to 29 requests from the War Pensions Agency.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer on 22 March 2001, Official Report, column 300W, regarding Porton Down, if he will request the Medical Research Council to consult the Operation Antler team of Wiltshire police regarding its advice on an independent epidemiological study for service personnel who took part in experiments at the Chemical Defence Establishment at Porton Down. [157342]

Dr. Moonie: No. The Medical Research Council are aware of the Wiltshire police investigation and should they wish to consult the Operation Antler team, they will do so.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many individuals have contacted the Porton Down Volunteers Helpline since February 1998. [157345]

Dr. Moonie: Since February 1998, the Porton Down helpline has received 626 inquiries in the form of telephone calls and letters.

[157495]

Dr. Moonie: The majority of the information requested is not held centrally and it could be provided only at disproportionate cost. I have already undertaken to provide the hon. Member with information on a number of the projects listed.

Qinetiq

Mr. Viggers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what inquiries were made about the ownership of the name Qinetiq before its acquisition by DERA; and with what results. [157556]

Dr. Moonie: The naming process resulted in approximately seven candidate options, all of which were subjected to a series of high-level searches. For each candidate option, its Uniform Resource Locator (URL) availability was established and existing registrations of similar company name, trademarks and URLs investigated. A cultural name check was also undertaken. The results ruled out several options mainly on the basis of URL availability.

The chosen name underwent a full and thorough examination by NewDERA's lawyers, Herbert Smith.

The services they undertook included:

Full URL name check

Trademark search and registration in all relevant classes and countries including a third party rights research Company name search.

Trademark registrations have been filed in the UK, US, EU and a number of other countries. During this period objections can be raised and the process is ongoing, expected to take several months. No notice of opposition has been received to date.

Hawk Jets (Exports)

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what support his Department has given to British Aerospace with regard to that company's contract to supply Hawk jets to India; [156871]

(2) what Ministers from his Department have been involved in discussions with (a) BAE and (b) the Indian Government regarding the contract to supply Hawk jets to India. [156872]

Dr. Moonie [holding answer 4 April 2001]: In accordance with the Ministry of Defence's responsibility for promoting legitimate defence exports in co-ordination with industry, MOD has given full support to BAE Systems' bid to supply Hawk jets to India.

In fulfilling this responsibility, the Secretary of State for Defence and the Minister for Defence Procurement have met with BAE Systems and the Indian Government to discuss the Hawk proposal.

Eurofighter

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the number of occasions (a) UK, (b) US, (c) Soviet and (d) other NATO aircrews in jet aircraft used cannon armament, in his assessing the need for a Eurofighter cannon. [156973]

Mr. Hoon: The historical pattern of operations, together with the improved short-range capability of the missiles with which Eurofighter will be armed, were taken into account in our assessment that the minimal value of a cannon on Eurofighter is more than outweighed by its considerable associated costs and disadvantages.

The last occasion on which the UK used a cannon in air-to-air combat resulted in one successful hit during the Falklands conflict. Figures for other countries are not known, but historical success rates for fighter gun attacks suggest a 5 per cent. combat probability of kill for the Allies late in World War II, and perhaps 10 per cent. in the Korean War. While the probability of success with guns has advanced little over the years, the performance of air-to-air missiles is now far in excess of these statistics. Similarly, the modern precision-guided munitions with which Eurofighter will be armed make firing a cannon in Eurofighter's offensive support role difficult to justify, owing to the risk of collateral damage and the increased vulnerability of the aircraft.

US Military Personnel (Compensation)

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer on 22 March 2001, Official Report, column 300W, if he will request his Department's Liaison Officer in Washington to gather information on US arrangements for paying compensation to veterans who participated in chemical warfare trials in the US. [157305]

Dr. Moonie: Yes, if there is a need to do so.

Canadian Military Personnel (Compensation)

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will send a team of his staff to Canada to evaluate the system under which the Canadian Government provides compensation to former military personnel who have developed illnesses as a result of taking part in chemical warfare experiments. [157307]

Dr. Moonie: I have no plans to do so.

Saville Inquiry

Mr. Gerald Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much his Department has spent to date in support of former soldiers in connection with the Saville Inquiry; of that sum how much was attributable to lawyers' fees; and how much has been budgeted for 2001–02. [157559]

Mr. Hoon: The total cost to date to the Ministry of Defence of supporting former and serving soldiers in connection with the Saville Inquiry is £9,600,428. Of this, £8,845,503 was attributable to payment to the legal teams, covering both fees and other related costs which have not been recorded separately.

The amount budgeted by the Ministry of Defence for payments to legal teams for 2001–02 comes to approximately £3.5 million.

Future Strategic Tanker Aircraft

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what the cost to date has been of the bid by DERA Boscombe Down for the main operating base for the future strategic tanker aircraft. [157454]

Dr. Moonie: The costs to date of the DERA Boscombe Down element of the bid for the main operating base for the future strategic tanker aircraft project are in the region of £240,000.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Regeneration Funds

Mrs. Ellman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many projects submitted to the Merseyside objective 1 programme have been approved; what is the total value of those projects; how many projected jobs are related to them; and if he will make a statement. [156233]

Ms Armstrong: Priority Panels have approved 66 such projects, of which offer letters have been issued to 31 applicants and accepted by 22 of them. The total eligible value of these projects is £152 million and European Regional Development Fund grants of £59.75 million have been made towards these costs. The projects are expected to create 5,073 and safeguard 6,901 jobs.

Mrs. Ellman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how much funding has been made available to Liverpool for regeneration purposes since 1997. [156235]

Ms Armstrong: Since 1997 £356.97 million has been made available to Liverpool for regeneration purposes. The table gives a breakdown of this figure.

Source of funding	Amount (£ million)
Single Regeneration Budget	80.87
Estates Renewal Challenge Fund	54
Neighbourhood Renewal Fund	'45.2
New Deal for Communities	61.9
Partnership Investment Programme	113
Land Reclamation Programme	2
Total	356.97

' The Neighbourhood Renewal Fund figure is the total indicative allocation for Liverpool for 2001–04

In addition, the Merseyside objective 1 programme 1994–99 has made available approximately £338 million for the regeneration of Merseyside since 1997. Unfortunately, it is not practicable to break down this figure by district. A further £844 million of European grants will be made available for the Merseyside sub-region for the 2000–06 programming period.

Mrs. Ellman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his answer of 21 December 2000, Official Report, column 312W, how many of the Merseyside objective 1 projects referred to the State Aids Policy Unit at the Department of Trade and Industry have been assessed by the unit; when the Government Office North West was informed about those decisions; which projects have been cleared; what their total value is; how many projected jobs relate to them; and if he will make a statement. [156371]

Ms Armstrong: The State Aids Policy Unit of the Department of Trade and Industry provided advice on 26 cases; Government Office for the North West was notified of the decisions between 22 January and 27 March 2001; 13 projects were cleared to proceed by the State Aids Unit. Of these only 10 projects will proceed through the appraisal process, with a total value of £16,806,303; they are expected to create 100 jobs.

Projects cleared by State Aids Policy Unit

Empire Reconstruction Phase 3
Crawford House
Mersey Forest Phase 3
King George Bootle Credit Union Action Plan
Kirby Lets and Credit Union Development Programme
Northwood Star Community transport
Dingle Community Learning Programme Building
Stanley Dock Action Plan
Beatles Themed Hard Days Night Hotel
Oakmere Conference and Multi-Media Centre

"Tiredness Can Kill"

Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what role concessionaires at motorway service areas have in respect of the siting of "Tiredness Kills" notices. [156834]

Mr. Hill: The Highways Agency has occasionally provided "Tiredness Can Kill" signs at locations, like the main holiday routes, where motorists are especially likely to drive for long periods without a rest. Motorway service area (MSA) operators were not involved in these decisions.

More recently, MSA operators have approached the Agency about providing these signs at their own expense. The Agency will normally agree unless there are site-specific reasons for refusing. There are no formal rules, but we have sought to ensure that, where provided, these signs are placed no more than a mile or two ahead of an MSA where drivers can stop safely.

Child Road Deaths

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many child road deaths were caused by defective child car seats in each of the last three years. [157096]

Mr. Hill [holding answer 5 April 2001]: Statistics on road accident fatalities in which defective child car seats were a contributory factor are not available.

Town and Country Planning (Control of Advertisements) Regulations

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on his plans to strengthen enforcement action in relation to the Town and Country Planning (Control of Advertisements) Regulations 1992. [157159]

Ms Beverley Hughes: In June I announced amendments we proposed to make to the Town and Country Planning (Control of Advertisements) Regulations 1992. One of the proposals is an amendment to section 225 of the Town and Country Planning Act 1990 to allow local authorities to act at their own discretion to remove posters where they consider them to be illegal. This would bring the legislation into line with current practice and protect the rights of property owners and those advertising legally. The amendment will be made when a suitable legislative opportunity arises.

Departmental Policies (Amber Valley)

Judy Mallaber: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will set out, with statistical information relating as directly as possible to the Amber Valley constituency, the effects on Amber Valley of his Department's policies and actions since 2 May 1997. [157129]

Ms Beverley Hughes: The principal funding that this Department has provided to Amber Valley Borough Council and Derbyshire County Council between 1997–98 and 2001–02 is shown in the tables. These include grants and borrowing approvals for revenue and capital expenditure.

It is not possible to determine how much of this money Derbyshire County Council has spent on Amber Valley constituency. It is for the local authority to decide where within its boundary these resources are applied.

Access Forums

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) when he will publish regulations on the establishment of access forums; [157155]

(2) if regulations to be made under the Countryside and Rights of Way Act 2000 will require local authorities to advertise locally and notify relevant groups which already exist before access forums are established; and if he will make a statement. [157156]

Mr. Meacher: We expect to consult on the proposed requirements for local access forums in England during the summer. Our proposals will include provision for the appointment of forum members and consultation by authorities with relevant interests prior to making appointments. We expect to lay regulations before Parliament before the end of the year.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list those local authorities that have established an access forum; if, in each case, the proposed establishment of the body was (a) advertised locally and (b) notified to rights of way groups; and if he will make a statement. [157154]

Mr. Meacher: No local access forums can be established under Part V of the Countryside and Rights of Way Act 2000 until regulations have been made by the Secretary of State under section 94 of the Act. Some local authorities operate informal consultative groups to discuss issues relating to access and rights of way. No information is held centrally about which authorities have done so. We welcome initiatives by local authorities to set up such groups ahead of any statutory system, and the Countryside Agency has issued guidance to authorities on how best this might be done.

Motor Vehicle Repairs

Mr. Stevenson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if the Vehicle Inspectorate routinely tests non-original equipment parts used in the motor vehicle body repair industry. [157122]

Mr. Hill: No. Testing and approval of components and vehicles prior to sale or registration is carried out by the Vehicle Certification Agency in the UK. However, there is no statutory approval standard for non original replacement body panels and so they are not tested or approved.

Mr. Stevenson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will take steps to require vehicles that have been repaired following a serious accident to be subjected to independent tests. [157126]

Mr. Hill: Under new provisions which have recently been approved by Parliament, such vehicles will, in future, need to be inspected by officials from the Department's Vehicle Inspectorate before they can legally be returned to the road.

The objective of inspecting such vehicles will be to ensure that they are genuine, rather than having been stolen and disguised with the identity of similar accident-damaged ones. At present in the region of 40,000 stolen cars annually are sold on in this way to unsuspecting purchasers. The new inspection scheme will help to eliminate this criminal activity.

The new inspection scheme is not intended to check on the adequacy of the accident repair—and this point will be made very clear to vehicle presenters. That would have made the scheme very costly and unnecessarily cumbersome. However, we are naturally very concerned to do all we can to see that only safe vehicles are used on the road and we will therefore be encouraging motorists to have vehicles independently checked by experts if there is any doubt at all about the quality of repair.

Mr. Stevenson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what regulations govern the disposal of vehicles that have been written off after accidents. [157123]

Mr. Hill: There are no regulations which deal specifically with this subject.

In practice when a vehicle is written off after an accident it might either end up being crushed or broken for spare parts. Alternatively, where the damage is not so severe, it might be repaired and returned to the road.

In all cases where a vehicle is crushed or broken the owner is required by Regulation 13 of the Road Vehicles (Registration and Licensing) Regulations 1971 to notify the Secretary of State of that fact and at the same time to surrender the registration document to him. This requirement is to be strengthened by a European Directive concerned with the disposal of motor vehicles when they have reached the "end of life".

In future, in all cases where a written-off vehicle is repaired and returned to the road it will firstly need to be inspected by officials from the Department's Vehicle Inspectorate. The objective of inspecting such vehicles will be to ensure that they are genuine, rather than stolen vehicles disguised with the identity of similar accident-damaged ones.

Mr. Stevenson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what annual usage of volatile organic compounds require motor vehicle body repair shops to register with their local authority. [157138]

Mr. Hill: The Environmental Protection (Prescribed Processes and Substances) Regulations 1991, as amended, made under Part I of the Environmental Protection Act 1990 set thresholds for annual usage of organic solvents in coating processes. The regulations include a requirement that the following processes be authorised by the relevant local authority:

> "Any process for the repainting or respraying of or of parts of road vehicles if the process may result in the release into the air of particulate matter or of any volatile organic compound and the carrying on of the process by the person concerned at the location in question is likely to involve the use of 1 tonne or more of organic solvents in any 12 month period."

Additionally, under the Solvent Emissions Directive (1999/13/EC) motor vehicle body repair shops that use between 0.5 and 1 tonne per annum of organic solvents will also be required to be regulated to control volatile organic compound emissions. However, for existing processes, the provisions of the Directive will not fully apply until October 2007.

Departmental Policies (Eccles)

Mr. Ian Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will set out, including statistical information relating as directly as possible to the Eccles constituency, the effects on Eccles of his Department's policies and actions since 2 May 1997. [157288]

Ms Beverley Hughes: The principal funding which this Department has provided to Salford in 1997–98 to 2000–01 is shown in the table. This includes grants and borrowings approvals for revenue and capital expenditure.

It is not possible to determine how much money has been spent on Eccles. It is for the local authority to decide where within its boundary these resources are invested.

The rest of the Eccles constituency will be included in the City Pride area which includes all the eligible areas of Manchester, Salford and Trafford; it is therefore not possible to determine how much ERDF will have been of benefit to Eccles. Traffic Calming Measures

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) what guidelines and specifications he issues about the installation of speed ramps; [157291]

(2) what the specifications are for the size of speed bumps. [157292]

Mr. Hill: Road hump is the generic name for any vertical deflection for controlling vehicle speed. The Highways (Road Humps) Regulations 1999 state that a road hump should be between 25 and 100mm in height, with no vertical face higher than 6mm and have a minimum width in the direction of traffic not less than 900mm.

The DETR has issued a range of traffic advisory leaflets to all local authorities in England and Wales giving guidance on the installation of road humps. Within the scope offered by the Regulations, it is for highway authorities to decide the most appropriate design and dimension of road hump for each of their roads.

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what guidance he issues about traffic calming outside schools. [157290]

Mr. Hill: A wide range of advice on traffic calming measures is available through the "Traffic Advisory Leaflet" series published by my Department and issued to all local authorities in England and Wales. The Road Safety Strategy, "Tomorrow's Roads—Safer for Everyone", published in March 2000, stated that local authorities are to be encouraged to use the increased powers they have available to them to introduce 20 mph zones and speed limits in residential areas, where appropriate. This should be a priority, particularly in areas where there are large numbers of children, such as in the vicinity of schools.

Carbon Dioxide Emissions

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what research his Department (a) has undertaken and (b) plans to undertake about the action required to achieve a reduction of 60 per cent. in carbon dioxide emissions in the UK; and if he will publish it. [157428]

Mr. Meacher: The UK Climate Change Programme, published in November 2000, noted that the Government would review the options for longer term energy choices, considering the scale of emission reductions that might be needed in view of current projections for energy use and the scope and cost of low carbon or energy options that may exist to bridge the gap.

The Government have recently published a report commissioned from AEA Technology, "Role of Technology in Emissions Abatement Under the UN-FCCC: the Medium to Long Term", and has placed a copy in the Library of the House. The study says that cuts of 70 per cent. to 90 per cent. in carbon dioxide emissions are technically feasible over the next 50 to 100 years, but supportive policy decisions will be needed to achieve this.

My Department also plans to commission a study this year to examine policy options for achieving cuts in greenhouse gas emissions beyond 2010, the time frame of the Climate Change Programme.

The findings of both studies will contribute towards the Government's response to the Royal Commission on Environmental Pollution report 2: "Energy—the Changing Climate".

Fuel Poverty

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many households have been removed from fuel poverty by improvements to the energy efficiency of their home, referred to in paragraph 6.10 of The UK Fuel Poverty Strategy. [157427]

Mr. Meacher: Provisional estimates suggest that the number of fuel poor households fell by nearly one million between 1996 and 1999, due to reductions in energy prices and improved incomes. Data are not yet available to estimate the effect of improvements made to the energy efficiency of homes during the period. These data will be collected as part of the 2001 English House Condition Survey to be carried out later this year.

Hydrogen Sulphide Leak (Southwark)

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what level of hydrogen sulphide was emitted at Southwark tube station on 8 March 2001; how many London Underground staff were advised to seek medical attention following the discovery of the hydrogen sulphide leak; how many members of the public were advised to seek medical attention following the discovery of the hydrogen sulphide leak; and what public statement was made to inform the public as to the reason for the closure of Southwark Underground station on that date. [157251]

Mr. Hill [holding answer 6 April 2001]: London Underground (LUL) informs me that Southwark station was closed on 8 March 2001 and the London Fire and Emergency Planning Authority (LFEPA) alerted following a report from contractors that the gas monitoring equipment was showing toxic gases present in a non-public area of the station. The LFEPA discovered sewage which had blocked the drainage system and had as a result caused a build up of hydrogen sulphide, though the level of gas found was very low. The LFEPA cleared the sewage therefore removing the source of the gas.

As a precautionary measure five members of LUL staff were taken to hospital for checks and later released without problems. LUL confirm that the public were not at risk at any time during this incident as the gas was found in a non-public area and upon its discovery they had instituted normal evacuation procedures and the station had been closed immediately. As the incident was quickly resolved without any ongoing problems London Underground felt that it did not merit a public statement to be released following it.

Abandoned Cars

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will estimate how many cars are abandoned illegally each year. [157256]

Mr. Hill [holding answer 6 April 2001]: The Department holds no central records at present of the number of vehicles abandoned illegally each year but plans to collect information in the next Municipal Waste Management Survey later this year.

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what measures the Government are proposing to address the problem of illegally abandoned vehicles. [157263]

Mr. Hill [holding answer 6 April 2001]: The Government have improved registration arrangements to require the seller to notify the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency (DVLA) when ownership of a vehicle changes. DVLA are encouraging local authorities to link electronically with them so that vehicle keeper information can be obtained more quickly and will shortly issue a Circular to all local authorities on the procedures for dealing with abandoned vehicles.

Two pilot schemes are due to start this month—in Lewisham and Newham, who will target unlicensed vehicles using DVLA's wheelclamping powers. The boroughs will retain the wheelclamp release fees and storage fees. Both pilots will run for 12 months.

We are also working with the Local Government Association, police and DVLA to identify good practice and exploit opportunities for cross-agency working in tackling the related problems of vehicle theft, vehicle excise duty evasion and abandoned vehicles and will consider from this the need for any legislative change.

Local Government

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to delay the deadline for local authorities to submit proposals for new political arrangements under Part II of the Local Government Act 2000, following the postponement of annual council meetings. [157609]

Ms Armstrong: Subject to the enactment of the Elections Bill, we intend to issue revised statutory guidance under the Local Government Act 2000 about the submission of proposals. We intend any such revised guidance to provide that those councils which are holding local elections on 7 June 2001, or where due to local circumstances the usual conduct of business has been disrupted, should submit proposals by 14 September 2001 instead of by the current guideline date of end of June 2001.

Windmills

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make it a condition of planning permission for new houses to be equipped with a small windmill to generate electricity. [157542]

Ms Beverley Hughes: It is for local planning authorities in the first instance to decide on specific planning conditions. We are keen to encourage renewable energy initiatives that are feasible and effective.

East Thurrock Port

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if, in advance of the visit of the Under-Secretary, my hon. Friend the Member for Streatham (Mr. Hill), to the C2C line in Thurrock, an examination will be made of anticipated additional freight movements consequent on the proposed new port development in East Thurrock, with particular reference to the impact on level crossing access to East Tilbury. [157361]

Mr. Hill [holding answer 6 April 2001]: The Strategic Rail Authority has consulted with Railtrack and freight operators to make outline assumptions on extra freight traffic as a result of the potential development. This is to help facilitate their London Freight Routing Strategy, ensuring sufficient network capacity is provided. The actual number of extra freight services that will use the C2C route as a result of the new development cannot be accurately forecast at present. It will be for the developers of the project in association with the rail freight operators and Railtrack to make predictions. I understand that Thurrock Council has convened a meeting in May involving the SRA, Railtrack, C2C and freight operators to discuss the impact of the options for the proposal.

Millennium Dome

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions which consultants have been engaged to undertake market testing in connection with the future use of the Millennium Dome site; at what cost to public funds; and if he will make a statement. [157561]

Ms Armstrong: The Government have asked English Partnerships to lodge and explore all expressions of interest, with a view to considering options and mechanisms for the future use of the Dome, before any announcement is made by the Government about the next process. English Partnerships, with Jones Lang LaSalle, are currently engaged in comprehensive market testing, to inform that process. The precise cost of this work is not currently known, as work is ongoing, but it is intended that these and any other costs incurred during the sale process will be deducted from the receipts generated by the disposal of the Dome site.

GM Crops

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will set out his reasons for proposing GM trials in Mathry, Pembrokeshire and Sealand in north Wales; and if he will publish the baseline data on each site on which the impact assessment will be based. [157485]

Mr. Meacher: The sites used in the Farm Scale Evaluations (FSE) are found by industry and are assessed against scientific criteria by the researchers carrying out the fieldwork. The sites are finally approved by the independent scientific steering committee overseeing the Farm Scale Evaluations on the basis of scientific criteria alone. Ministers do not take decisions on the choice of sites. The scientific steering committee selects sites to reflect the geographic range across the UK where the conventional varieties of the FSE crops are already grown. This ensures that a full range of habitats is evaluated.

The design of the Farm Scale Evaluation experiment does not require a pre-experiment assessment of baseline data other than pre-sowing seed sampling, which gives an indication of the potential for weeds to grow in the field. This is because the experiment is designed to compare effects of herbicide use between the two sides of each experimental field. One half is randomly selected and planted with the GM crop, while the other half is planted with the non-GM equivalent crop. This design allows for the effects of the herbicides on wildlife in the two halves of the field to be assessed more accurately than would be possible by comparison with wildlife in the crop before the start of the experiment.

The purpose of the Farm Scale Evaluations is to examine whether there are any differences in the diversity and abundance of farmland wildlife associated with the use of GM herbicide tolerant crops with the herbicides to which they are tolerant, as compared with equivalent non-GM crops. The wildlife found in crop fields is affected by factors such as the vegetation and crop type. Wildlife present in the bare field before sowing or in a previous, different crop the year before, will not be the same as that to be expected in the experimental crop. Measurements of differences in wildlife between a pre-trial audit and within the experimental crop during the experiment would therefore not allow the effects of the herbicide to be measured.

Mrs. Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions who will be liable for providing compensation for farms in organic production or conversion if their (a) production and (b) status is damaged as a result of genetically modified farm scale trials being undertaken at Mathry, Pembrokeshire. [157571]

Mr. Meacher: Liability for the use of GM crops is an important issue, which is being addressed both at European and UK levels. I will be considering this year a range of options for possible new liability provisions in respect of any damage from GM crops. In the meantime an individual who has suffered loss may be able to commence an action in the courts. Each case will turn on its own facts and the question of who is liable will be determined in the light of all the circumstances.

Mrs. Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what the procedures are for informing (a) hon. Members representing Welsh constituencies, (b) the National Assembly for Wales and (c) local authorities about plans to use sites in their areas for genetically modified trial tests. [157569]

Mr. Meacher: Releases of Genetically Modified Organisms (GMOs) are controlled under European Union Directive 90/220. This recognises two types of release, those for research purposes (known as Part B releases) and those for commercial purposes (known as Part C releases).

Any Part B releases in Wales would have to be notified to the National Assembly before sowing and would have to be advertised in a paper circulating in the locality. GM crops holding a Part C release consent, like the GM maize to be grown in Wales this year, are assessed by all EU member states. The consent is valid in all member states and once granted there are no requirements for individual sowings of the crop to be notified to the Government or consulted upon.

Under an agreement with SCIMAC, the farming and biotechnology industry body, DETR publishes site location details of all the FSEs in England and Wales on its website "www. detr. gov. uk" including those of crops holding Part C approval. DETR officials informed National Assembly officials of the locations of the sites in Wales once they had been notified of the locations by industry. With the agreement of Assembly officials they then wrote to community councils and local authorities in Wales in which a trial was planned in order to provide information about the Farm Scale Evaluation programme.

Mrs. Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions who will be responsible for the monitoring of genetically modified trial test sites in the constituency of Preseli Pembrokeshire. [157567]

Mr. Meacher: The ecological study monitoring is carried out by scientists from the research consortium comprising the Centre for Ecology and Hydrology (CEH), the Institute of Arable Crops Research (IACR) and the Scottish Crops Research Institute (SCRI).

Scientists visit study sites during and after the sowing of the GM crop and also in subsequent years to assess the effects of the herbicide on biodiversity. These site visits are supplemented by inspections from the Central Science Laboratory (CSL) to check that the release of the GM crop is being carried out in accordance with the release consent.

Mrs. Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what key indicators will be monitored on each of the genetically modified farm scale trials sites on a case-by-case basis in the constituency of Preseli Pembrokeshire. [157566]

Mr. Meacher: The Farm Scale Evaluations use a split field study design whereby half the field is sown with GM crops and half with conventional crops of the same type. The researchers compare key indicators of biodiversity between the GM and non-GM sides of the fields.

The indicators being measured at each site are:

Soil seed bank;

Arable plant diversity, biomass and estimated seed return;

Field margin and boundary vegetation, noting species in flower and signs of unintentional spray drift of weed-killer during its application to the field;

Gastropods (slugs and snails): abundance, activity and diversity measures;

Arthropods (especially insects and spiders) on vegetation, concentrating on plant bugs (Heteroptera), spring tails (Collembola), and the caterpillars of butterflies, moths (Lepidoptera), and sawflies (related to wasps (Hymenoptera)); diversity and biomass measures;

Ground (Carabid) beetles and other ground dwellings arthropods; abundance and diversity measures;

Bees and butterflies; observational studies;

Earthworm casts—observational studies.

Full details on the science of the Farm Scale Evaluations are available from a scientific paper on the DETR's website: www.detr.gov.uk

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what representations (a) he received from and (b) he made to (i) the National Assembly for Wales and (ii) the Wales Office prior to the decision to allow field trials of genetically modified crops on three farms in Wales; and if he will make a statement. [157601]

Mr. Meacher: Meetings were held earlier this year with Ministers from the devolved administrations, including the National Assembly for Wales and the Office of the Secretary of State for Wales which discussed the Farm Scale Evaluation programme in general terms.

Sites for GM crops under the Farm Scale Evaluations programme are found by industry and are assessed against scientific criteria by the researchers carrying out the fieldwork. They are finally approved by the independent scientific steering committee overseeing the evaluations. Ministers do not take the decisions on the choice of sites. Sites are selected on scientific criteria and the independent scientists on the steering committee have always been open about the need to have a range of sites across the UK representative of where maize is grown. This is to help ensure that a full range of habitats is evaluated.

Carwyn Jones AM, the Minister for Rural Affairs, National Assembly for Wales, wrote to me on 23 March stating that he might issue a prohibition notice under the Environmental Protection Act 1990 to stop releases of GM maize in Wales. He has asked that the Advisory Committee on Releases to the Environment undertake an urgent scientific assessment into the adequacy of separation distances between GM and non GM crops, particularly organic crops.

Railtrack

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what powers the Government directors on Railtrack have been given; and whom they will report to. [157701]

Mr. Hill: There are no Government directors on the Railtrack Board. On 2 April, Railtrack announced its intention to appoint a non-executive director to its main Board with a remit to provide a public interest and consumer voice within the Board. On reporting, normal corporate governance arrangements will apply, with the new director under the same obligations as other non-executive directors.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what discussions have taken place on Government shareholding in Railtrack in exchange for (a) Government funding and (b) subsidy. [157700]

Mr. Hill: The package of rail measures announced on 2 April included an agreed Statement of Principles setting out the basis for a new relationship between Railtrack and Government. The package did not include proposals for Government to acquire more shares in the company.

Housing (Southwark)

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how much money has been (a) bid for, (b) allocated, (c) handed over and (d) spent on (i) housing and (ii) regeneration schemes in the London borough of Southwark in each of the last five years. [157264]

Mr. Raynsford: The principal funding that this Department has provided to the London borough of Southwark for (i) housing and (ii) regeneration schemes are shown in the table. This includes grants and borrowing approvals for revenue and capital expenditure.

These figures have been drawn together from a wide variety of sources and are the most accurate available at this time.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what the outstanding debt is on Southwark council housing; and what his estimate is of the cost of the outstanding necessary capital works to Southwark council housing. [157265]

Mr. Raynsford: The Housing Revenue Account (HRA) credit ceiling is an assessment of the amount of an authority's outstanding debt that is attributed to its own housing stock. The 2000–01 mid-year HRA credit ceiling for Southwark borough council as at 30 September was £732,105,357.

The Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions (DETR) does not make estimates centrally of the outstanding necessary capital works to individual local authorities' housing stock. As part of the annual Housing Investment Programme local authorities are asked to provide estimates to the DETR of the amount they need to invest on capital works to their stock. Southwark council estimated that at April 2000, they needed to spend £220 million to bring their own housing stock (of almost 48,000 units) into a satisfactory condition.

London Underground

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many staff days have been lost (a) in the last 10 years and (b) in the past 12 months due to industrial action on London Underground. [157478]

Mr. Hill: Information on the number of staff days lost due to industrial action could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

However, information on the number of days when industrial action was taken which had at least a partial effect on service is available. In the last 12 months, industrial action took place on two days: 5 February 2001 and 29 March 2001.

The following numbers of days of industrial action occurred in the last 10 years.

Year	Days of industrial action

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many cases of graffiti have been reported on London Underground property in each of (a) the last 10 years and (b) the past 12 months; and how much money has been spent by London Underground in each of (i) the last 10 years and (ii) the past 12 months on removing graffiti. [157476]

Mr. Hill: This is an operational matter for London Underground (LUL) who have provided the following information in the table as recorded by the British Transport Police.

Year/month	Number of graffiti cases reported
1991	642

London Underground informs me that they estimate that the costs of preventive measures and removal of graffiti have been around £10 million per annum. However it adds that this figure has probably reduced over recent years as a number of security projects have been completed.

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many signals were passed at danger by trains on the London Underground in (a) each of the last 10 years and (b) each of the last 12 months. [157692]

Mr. Hill: This is an operational matter for London Underground. However, since December 1999 a report on signals passed at danger (SPADs) prepared by London Underground has been placed in the Libraries of both Houses each month. This was flagged in a reply to the hon. Member on 11 November 1999, Official Report, columns 687–88W. The report includes a table of SPADs by month since March 1993, prior to which the data were recorded in a different way that does not allow for meaningful comparison. The most recent version of this report covers the period up to January 2001.

The report also highlights that on the Underground, signals and the mechanical stops are (except in a few cases) set back to greater than braking distance from the danger that they protect. So very few SPADs result in actual danger of collision.

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many (a) station staff and (b) train drivers were employed by London Underground in each of (i) the last 10 years and (ii) the past 12 months. [157477]

Mr. Hill: The number of station staff and train drivers in each of the last 12 months is as follows:

2000–01	Station staff	Train drivers
April	5,726	2,896
May	5,721	2,892
June	5,760	2,886
July	5,773	2,869
August	5,776	2,887
September	5,786	2,895
October	5,777	2,902
November	5,781	2,929
December	5,810	2,925
January	5,771	2,928
February	5,814	2,942
March	5,850	2,933

The number of station staff and train drivers in each of the five years 1995–96 to 1999–2000 inclusive is as follows:

Year	Station staff	Train drivers
1995–96	4,568	2,216
1996–97	4,779	2,474
1997–98	4,815	2,621
1998–99	5,113	2,787
1999–2000	5,708	2,907

Data prior to 1995–96 can be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what the price was of (a) a zone one single fare on the London Underground and (b) a monthly zones one to six travelcard on the London Underground in January of each of the last 10 years. [157466]

Mr. Hill: Prior to July 2000, London Transport fares were the statutory responsibility of London Transport. Responsibility for fares policy for the Underground transferred to the Mayor for London in July 2000.

The fare prices for a zone one single fare on London Underground and for a monthly zones one to six travelcard (valid on buses, national rail and Docklands Light Railway as well as the Underground) for the last 10 years are:

	Zone 1 single	Monthly Z1–6 travelcard
2001	1.50	139.80
2000	1.50	136.00
1999	1.40	134.10
1998	1.30	130.60
1997	1.20	126.80
1996	1.10	124.50
1995	1.00	119.90
1994	0.90	113.30
1993	0.90	104.50

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many arrests were made on the London Underground by British Transport Police in each of the last 10 years. [157475]

Mr. Hill: This is an operational matter for the British Transport Police who inform me that although it is not possible to provide arrest figures covering the last 10 years it is possible to supply crime analysis data as supplied to the Home Office. The table identifies the total number of offences reported over the last four financial years. It is not possible to provide information earlier than 1997, as the data are not kept in this format.

	Offences
1997–98	5,799
1998–99	12,949
1999–2000	18,220
2000–01	13,972

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many trains in use on the London Underground are (a) less than three years old, (b) between three and 10 years old, (c) between 10 and 15 years old and (d) more than 15 years old; and what the average age is of trains currently in use on the London Underground. [157474]

Mr. Hill: London Underground has provided the following information:

Age of rolling stock	Number of trains
Less than 3 years	165
3–10 years	90
10–15 years	0
More than 15 years	341.5

It should be noted that over half of the stock older than 10 years has undergone refurbishment in the last 10 years.

The average age of all trains is approximately 17.5 years.

London Airport Rail Links

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he will take a decision on whether there should be a London airports rail franchise; when it is planned that London Heathrow airport will have direct rail connections to (a) Waterloo and (b) St. Pancras stations; and what the estimated cost is of the necessary work to complete these works. [157465]

Mr. Hill: The Strategic Rail Authority is currently investigating the possibility of a London airports franchise but an early decision as to whether or not to proceed is not expected. An airport service to St. Pancras will be dependent upon completion of CTRL Stage 2 and upon appropriate platform capacity being made available at the new St. Pancras station. A direct connection to Waterloo is a conceptual scheme currently being developed by BAA and Railtrack.

Railways (Upgrading)

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he will announce, with the Strategic Rail Authority, plans for improvements to the Great Western Main Line; when it is expected that upgraded signalling and junctions and new flyovers for the Great Western Main Line mentioned in the SRA's Strategic Agenda will be delivered; and what the cost of these upgrades will be. [157464]

Mr. Hill: The SRA's Strategic Agenda lists a range of schemes which it would be possible to pursue. No decisions have yet been taken as to the priorities attached to particular projects which are not yet in progress. The timscale for infrastructure upgrading on the Great Western main line is driven by principal resignalling works that must be completed by 2011. It is not yet possible to give specific costs.

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what the projected cost is of the Joint Venture for the East Coast Main Line upgrade; what the projected amount is of public and private investment needed for this project; what the estimated start and finish dates are for this project; and how soon after revised bids are received he intends to make an announcement, together with the Strategic Rail Authority, on the preferred bidder for the East Coast Main Line franchise. [157462]

Mr. Hill: The Strategic Rail Authority (SRA) is currently establishing a project development group to take forward the upgrade of the East Coast Main Line and to develop the project to a sufficiently advanced stage for its construction to be competitively tendered. It is not expected that the joint venture approach will alter significantly the overall costs or timing of the upgrade.

In view of the change to the structure of the upgrade, the SRA has asked shortlisted counterparties for a replacement Inter City East Coast franchise to review their original bids. The SRA currently expects to receive any changes to their proposals by 17 April. Once the SRA has received and considered these it will decide whether to proceed with a request to the Secretary of State for a direction to authorise early replacement of the franchise. Any such request will be given appropriate and timely consideration.

Correspondence

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when the hon. Member for Walsall, North will receive a reply to his letter of 26 February regarding a constituent, Ref. P/BH/005818/01. [157457]

Ms Beverley Hughes: Due to an administrative error in the ministerial correspondence unit, there was a delay in processing the original letter and enclosures.

I understand that my hon. Friend has now received a response from the unit explaining that as the issues raised cover a pending planning application, the correspondence has been transferred to the Planning Inspectorate and a direct reply will be sent by the Chief Executive of the Planning Inspectorate shortly.

Foot and Mouth

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions for what reasons the borough of Macclesfield is not included in the list of rural local authorities to which the emergency business rate relief scheme will be applied as a result of foot and mouth disease. [157496]

Mr. Meacher: The borough of Macclesfield is not an authority which meets the criteria of rurality used for the targeting of this scheme.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he intends to review the list of rural local authorities to which the emergency rate relief scheme is applicable due to the outbreak of foot and mouth disease; and if he will make a statement. [157498]

Mr. Meacher: I will keep the operation of the scheme under review in the light of the representations made to me.

Witney-Oxford Railway

Mr. Woodward: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment his Department has made of the impact of the proposed reopening of the Witney to Oxford railway line. [157120]

Mr. Hill: Neither the Department nor the Strategic Rail Authority have made any such assessment.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Diego Garcia

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make an estimate of the number of British subjects born in Diego Garcia who are still alive. [157504]

Mr. Battle: It is not practicable for HMG to make a realistic estimate of the number of such British Dependent Territories citizens as we do not know where they are nor do we have any means of knowing how many may have died over the past 30 years or so.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will discuss with the United States Government the numbers of (a) Filipinos, (b) Mauritians and (c) Ilois being employed by contractors on the Diego Garcia air-base; and what steps he is taking to rectify imbalances in the numbers of different nationalities employed. [157501]

Mr. Battle: Under our arrangements with the United States Government it is agreed that the United States authorities and their contractors will use workers recruited in Mauritius and the Seychelles to the maximum extent practicable. In recruiting workers there should be no discrimination between qualified Ilois workers and equally qualified other Mauritian workers.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Governor of Mauritius about the placement of anti-personnel mines in (a) Diego Garcia and (b) on 65 islands in the Chagos Archipelago designed to keep out Ilois people wishing to return to see ancestral graves. [157502]

Mr. Battle: There are no anti-personnel landmines on Diego Garcia or any of the other islands in the Chagos Archipelago.

I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given by my hon. Friend the Minister for Europe on 6 March 2000, Official Report, column 504W.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he is taking to include Diego Garcia in the feasibility study in exercise of his Department's obligations to balance the needs of those who were born in Diego Garcia with the interests of the British-American defence forces. [157500]

Mr. Battle: Access to Diego Garcia is restricted in accordance with our treaty obligations with the United States and hence Diego Garcia is not included in the scope of the feasibility studies being conducted.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps are being taken to estimate the economic losses suffered by Diego Garcia as a result of the closure by the Government of the plantations in 1971; and what steps will be taken to restore economic activity, indicating (a) the estimated consumption of coconuts by the residents of Diego Garcia, (b) the appropriate price thereof and (c) what funds can be raised from this source to restore facilities on the islands for the benefit of residents. [157574]

Mr. Battle: The establishments of defence facilities necessarily entailed the closure of the commercial coconut plantations in Diego Garcia. There is no prospect of the resinstatement of these plantations in the forseeable future.

National Missile Defence

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the Government's discussions with the United States on the potential use of the islands (a) in the Chagos Archipelago and (b) in Diego Garcia for facilities for the US National Missile Defence. [157503]

Mr. Battle: We have had no discussions with the United States regarding the potential use of the Chagos Archipelago, including Diego Garcia, for facilities for National Missile Defence.

Chagos Archipelago

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress has been made in the consideration of facilitating a temporary visit by the Ilois to the Chagos Archipelago, following the granting of permission to return there. [157517]

Mr. Battle: The question of a temporary visit to the territory for the Ilois has been discussed with their representatives who have undertaken to put forward proposals for consideration.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action he is taking to encourage British subjects born in the Chagos Archipelago to co-operate with the Americans on Diego Garcia to establish areas of common interest. [157499]

Mr. Battle: I understand that representatives of a group of Ilois are in contact with the United States Government.

Overseas Territories

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on proposals to grant British citizenship to citizens of overseas territories. [157637]

Mr. Battle: As announced to Parliament by the Secretary of State in March 1999, we are committed to introducing legislation to give British citizenship to all British Dependent Territories citizens in the Overseas Territories. We will make parliamentary time available to introduce this legislation as soon as is practicable. Preparatory work to agree the principles of such a Bill along with drafting Instructions for Parliamentary Counsel has been completed.

Cayman Islands

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations the UK has made in support of lifting OECD blacklisting from the Cayman Islands prior to the review of the blacklist in June. [157638]

Mr. Battle: The UK takes seriously its duty to represent the Overseas Territories and Crown Dependencies internationally. We take equally seriously efforts by the Financial Action Task Force—of which we are a leading member—to combat money laundering. Over the last year, we have therefore sought at all times to ensure that the FATF's information about the Cayman Islands is accurate and complete and that the Cayman Islands are treated on exactly the same basis as all the other jurisdictions examined by the FATF. We have also helped and encouraged the Cayman Islands authorities to make the necessary changes to their system in order to meet international standards in this area. It would be inappropriate to seek special treatment for the Cayman Islands from the FATF, but we will continue to ensure that the Cayman Islands are treated fairly and objectively when decisions are made.

Kyoto Treaty

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when the Government plan to ratify the Kyoto treaty. [157140]

Mr. Battle: The UK aims to ratify the Kyoto Protocol in 2002, along with other EU member states.

Sierra Leone

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if the Head of News Department saw a copy of the Foreign Affairs Committee's Second report of Session 1998–99 on Sierra Leone before its publication. [156824]

Mr. Robin Cook [holding answer 3 April 2001]: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Spelthorne (Mr. Wilshire) on 16 March 2001, Official Report, column 775W, and to the evidence my officials gave to the Standards and Privileges Committee, whose report was published on 30 March 1999.

French Lamb Exports

Mr. Livsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make representations to the French Government on the non-payment by French companies and individuals for lambs exported via Farmers Ferry to France in January and early February. [155942]

Ms Quin: I have been asked to reply.

Under the French legislation, published on 9 March, compensation will be paid to the exporter where sheep slaughtered by French authorities were still their property. The British Embassy in Paris has been actively pursuing the question of compensation, on behalf of some British sheep exporters, for sheep slaughtered in France. This has included passing documentary evidence of ownership of sheep to the French authorities. The British Embassy would be happy similarly to help other exporters.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Departmental Policies (London)

Ms Buck: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will set out, with statistical information relating as directly as possible to London, the effects of his Department's policies and actions since 2 May 1997; and if he will make a statement. [152274]

Mr. Chris Smith: Since May 1997 my Department has introduced and developed a variety of initiatives which will impact on my hon. Friend's constituency which promote our objectives of access, excellence, education, and creativity and employment. We have published our strategies to take this forward in "Tomorrows Tourism" and "A Sporting Future for All", which was recently followed up by "The Government's Plan for Sport". We have tackled the issue of social inclusion taking forward the recommendations of Policy Action Team 10 on Arts and Sport and developing social inclusion policies across all our areas which is recognised within the most recent progress report "Building on PAT10".

We have given more support to the cultural and sporting infrastructure. The Spending Review 2000 secured a doubling of the budget for sport and the largest ever increase for the arts: an increase of 80 per cent. from £186 million in 1997–98 to £336 million in 2003–04. In taking forward our aim to develop the educational potential of culture and sport, £40 million has been allocated to developing Creative Partnerships; we have established, through lottery funding, the £30 million National Foundation for Youth Music; and secured an additional £130 million for primary schools sports and arts facilities through the Space for Sport and the Arts programme. With £120 million of central Government and Lottery funding we will be providing a school sports co-ordinator in one in four secondary schools to work with local primary and special schools to improve sporting provision and physical education for children in the most deprived areas. We have delivered free access to national museums for children and the over 60's and additional money will be provided to allow this to be extended to everyone in December 2001. We have commissioned a Taskforce which is currently considering the issues facing non-national museums in the regions.

We have made improvements in the way the Lottery is spent to ensure a fairer distribution. The introduction of the New Opportunities Fund for spending on health, education and the environment has made a real difference to communities everywhere. For instance it has invested £120 million to support the People's Network, which will enable all 4,300 public libraries to offer free public internet access through UK online learning centres; and a further £50 million to stimulate development of content to support the Network.

We have established the Greater London Authority and an elected Mayor for London. The Mayor now has responsibility for most aspects of culture in London and has appointed a Cultural Strategy Group to advise him and to draw up a cultural strategy for London.

We have published a Green Paper "Culture and Creativity: The Next Ten Years", setting out how individual creative talent can be given the support it needs from childhood to flourish; how artists and cultural institutions can be freed from bureaucratic controls; and how the freedom to explore and enjoy creativity and culture can be made available to all.

Through their commitment to public service broadcasting, the Government have helped to foster an environment in which a creative, commercially successful broadcasting industry provides a wide range of UK-made, high quality, original programmes catering for all viewers and listeners. We have ensured a secure funding base for the BBC and S4C, while giving them the freedom to develop commercial operations which complement and support their public service remit. We have made it clear in the Communications White Paper that public service broadcasting will continue to have a key role to play in the digital future. The Government have introduced free television licences for people aged 75 or over from 1 November last year.

My Department sponsors the British Tourist Authority (BTA) which continues to promote Britain effectively as an attractive tourist destination for overseas visitors. The BTA's successful marketing activities are aimed at bringing benefits to all parts of the UK, including London.

In delivering these initiatives we aim to make cultural and sporting activities inclusive ones, boosting participation and improving the quality of life for all.

The introduction of the New Opportunities Fund for spending on health, education and the environment has made a real difference to communities everywhere. For instance it has invested £120 million to support the People's Network, which will enable all 4,300 public libraries to offer free public internet access through UK online learning centres; and a further £50 million to stimulate development of content to support the Network.

We have set up a Regional Cultural Consortium in each of the English regions outside London to champion culture and creativity, including heritage, sport and tourism, and to draw up regional cultural strategies identifying regional objectives and priorities.

Through their commitment to public service broadcasting, the Government have helped to foster an environment in which a creative, commercially successful broadcasting industry provides a wide range of UK-made, high-quality, original programmes catering for all viewers and listeners. We have ensured a secure funding base for the BBC and S4C, while giving them the freedom to develop commercial operations which complement and support their public service remit. Departmental Policies (Newbury and West Berkshire)

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will set out, including statistical information relating as directly as possible to the Newbury constituency, the effects on Newbury and West Berkshire of his Department's policies and actions since 2 May 1997. [154569]

Mr. Chris Smith [holding answer 20 March 2001]: Since May 1997 my Department has introduced and developed a variety of initiatives which will impact on the hon. Member's constituency which promote our objectives of access, excellence, education, and creativity and employment. We have published our strategies to take this forward in "Tomorrows Tourism" and "A Sporting Future for All", which was recently followed up by "The Government's Plan for Sport". We have tackled the issue of social inclusion taking forward the recommendations of Policy Action Team 10 on Arts and Sport and developing social inclusion policies across all our areas which is recognised within the most recent progress report "Building on PAT10".

We have given more support to the cultural and sporting infrastructure. The Spending Review 2000 secured a doubling of the budget for sport and the largest ever increase for the arts: an increase of 80 per cent. from £186 million in 1997–98 to £336 million in 2003–04. In taking forward our aim to develop the educational potential of culture and sport £40 million has been allocated to developing Creative Partnerships; we have established through lottery funding, the £30 million National Foundation for Youth Music; and secured an additional £130 million for primary schools sports and arts facilities through the Space for Sport and the Arts programme. With £120 million of central Government and lottery funding we will be providing a school sports co-ordinator in one in four secondary schools to work with local primary and special schools to improve sporting provision and physical education for children in the most deprived areas. We have delivered free access to national museums for children and the over 60's and additional money will be provided to allow this to be extended to everyone in December 2001. We have commissioned a taskforce which is currently considering the issues facing non-national museums in the regions.

We have made improvements in the way the lottery is spent to ensure a fairer distribution. The introduction of the New Opportunities Fund for spending on health, education and the environment has made a real difference to communities everywhere. For instance it has invested £120 million to support the People's Network, which will enable all 4,300 public libraries to offer free public internet access through UK online learning centres; and a further £50 million to stimulate development of content to support the Network.

We have commissioned a Task Force which is currently considering the issues facing non-national museums in the regions.

We have made improvements in the way the lottery is spent to ensure a fairer distribution. The introduction of the New Opportunities Fund for spending on health, education and the environment has made a real difference to communities everywhere. For instance it has invested £120 million to support the People's Network, which will enable all 4,300 public libraries to offer free public internet access through UK online learning centres; and a further £50 million to stimulate development of content to support the Network.

We have set up a Regional Cultural Consortium in each of the English regions outside London to champion culture and creativity, including heritage, sport and tourism, and to draw up regional cultural strategies identifying regional objectives and priorities.

We have published a Green Paper "Culture and Creativity: The Next Ten Years", setting out how individual creative talent can be given the support it needs from childhood to flourish; how artists and cultural institutions can be freed from bureaucratic controls; and how the freedom to explore and enjoy creativity and culture can be made available to all.

Through their commitment to public service broadcasting, the Government have helped to foster an environment in which a creative, commercially successful broadcasting industry provides a wide range of UK-made, high-quality, original programmes catering for all viewers and listeners. We have ensured a secure funding base for the BBC and S4C, while giving them the freedom to develop commercial operations which complement and support their public service remit. We have made it clear in the Communications White Paper that public service broadcasting will continue to have a key role to play in the digital future. The Government have introduced free television licences for people aged 75 or over from 1 November last year.

My Department sponsors the British Tourist Authority (BTA) which continues to promote Britain effectively as an attractive tourist destination for overseas visitors. The BTA's successful marketing activities are aimed at bringing benefits to all parts of the UK, including Great Grimsby.

In delivering these initiatives we aim to make cultural and sporting activities inclusive ones, boosting participation and improving the quality of life for all.

Great Grimsby

According to the information supplied to us by the distributing bodies for the national lottery awards database, there have been 76 national lottery awards to Great Grimsby, totalling £2,640,333. This includes one grant from the Millennium Festival totalling £50,000.

Five Millennium Award Winners have been identified from Great Grimsby and between them they have received grants totalling £36,114.

Information on the number of beneficiaries of free television licences by constituency is not available, but estimates based on the 1991 Census indicate that there were approximately 6,100 people aged 75 or over living in the Great Grimsby constituency.

There are of course other initiatives in the wider context of the area which may have an effect on the Great Grimsby constituency. These are:

£18,746,000 for the Deep Millennium Project nearby.

Yorkshire Arts received £9,288,000 in 2000–01 from the Arts Council to support arts and cultural activity across its region. In 2001–02 this will increase to £10,315,832 or by 11 per cent.

Foot and Mouth (Tourism)

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what discussions he has had with (a) the British Tourist Authority and (b) other tourist bodies regarding the impact of foot and mouth disease on the tourist trade. [157027]

Janet Anderson: Close contact is being maintained with the British Tourist Authority on the impact of foot and mouth disease on the tourism trade. In addition, we have been in frequent contact with tourism industry representatives both at formal meetings and through visits around the country; for example, on 5 April 2001 my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State hosted a summit meeting of industry representatives to discuss foot and mouth.

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what assessment he has made of the impact of foot and mouth disease on non-rural tourism in Britain. [157030]

Janet Anderson: We are making inquiries of a range of tourism-related bodies to determine the impact of foot and mouth disease on both rural and non-rural tourism businesses. This research is at an early stage but it would seem that while the responses are very variable, it is clear that many businesses have been affected.

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what discussions his Department has had with official veterinary agencies of foreign Governments on the giving of advice on travel to the United Kingdom. [157029]

Janet Anderson: My Department has not had discussions with any official veterinary agencies of foreign Governments.

The Foreign and Commonwealth Office, through its posts overseas, and the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food have been in close contact with veterinary authorities, agriculture ministries and other parts of government worldwide to reassure them that, provided individuals observe the standard guidance on travel to the countryside, there is no reason why visitors should not travel to the UK.

Lindisfarne Gospels

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what discussions he has had with the British Museum about exhibiting the Lindisfarne Gospels in the north of England: and if he will seek the inclusion of Holy Island in any future programme to exhibit the Gospels outside London. [156969]

Mr. Alan Howarth: The Lindisfarne Gospels are a national treasure. They are the property of the British Library under the British Library Act 1972. We appreciate the particular importance of the Gospels to the people of the North-East where they have been exhibited recently. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State recently met a delegation, led by the Bishop of Durham. Following that meeting, my right hon. Friend has written to the Chairman of the British Library inviting them to discuss with the delegation the feasibility of exhibiting the Gospels in the North-East on a more regular basis. No doubt the question of an exhibition of the Gospels on Holy Island could form part of such a discussion.

Music Librarians

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what measures he is taking to encourage the recruitment and retention of music librarians by public libraries; and if he will make a statement. [157562]

Mr. Chris Smith: My responsibility under the Public Libraries and Museums Act 1964 is to ensure that library authorities in England meet their statutory duty to provide a "comprehensive and efficient" public library service. The day-to-day management of library services, however, is for library authorities, who must make their own decisions about the detailed nature of the library service they provide, based on local resources and priorities. This includes such matters as the numbers, grading and qualifications of staff, and where they are employed within the library service.

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many local authorities employ full-time music librarians; and how many did so in 1996–97. [157563]

Mr. Chris Smith: This information is not collected centrally. The CIPFA Public Library Statistics, which are available in the Library of the House, provide information on the numbers of professional, other non-manual and manual posts in public libraries but do not identify the numbers of posts in the various libraries and departments of any library authority.

Concessionary Television Licences

Mr. Quinn: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what plans he has to amend the regulations governing the Accommodation for Residential Care concessionary television licence scheme to prevent residents losing their entitlement to the concession following changes introduced by their housing managers. [157854]

Mr. Chris Smith: A number of hon. Members have expressed concern about residents in sheltered accommodation losing their entitlement to the £5 Accommodation for Residential Care television licence fee concession, as the result of changes to the way their accommodation is provided or managed. The Government share these concerns. We propose to introduce measures to preserve the rights of beneficiaries of the concessionary scheme who remain in a sheltered housing complex or residential home provided or managed by a local authority, a housing association or a development corporation, when the social mix or the level of warden cover change. We are consulting with the BBC on the formulation of the necessary amendments to the regulations governing the concessionary scheme.

UK Standards Authority for Sport

Dr. Gibson: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what progress has been made on the establishment of the UK Standards Authority for Sport; and what the membership is of the authority. [156487]

Kate Hoey: Over recent months, I have been in discussion with sporting and medical experts over whether there is a need for a UK Standards Authority for Sport and Exercise Medicine which could ensure that adequate standards are in place to minimise the risk of injury or illness through sport.

In order to consider current provision, and whether such an authority should be established, I have convened a working group who will meet over the next few months to explore the key issues involved. The working group will then make recommendations to me on whether there is a need for a UK Standards Authority for Sport and Exercise Medicine, and if so what its role and remit might be, and how it might be established.

Under the chairmanship of Sir Oliver Popplewell, the group met for the first time on 27 March and have now begun a process of consultation with experts from a range of medical and sporting backgrounds.

The other members of the working group are David Oxley, OBE, Chairman of the Central Council for Physical Recreation; Peter Hamlyn, consultant neurosurgeon; Professor Donald Macleod, Vice President of the Royal College of Surgeons; Dr. Stephanie Cook, MBE, modern pentathlon gold medal winner at Sydney 2000; Dr. Nick Webborn, Medical Adviser for the National Sport Medicine Institute; and Karen Hambly, Sports Medicine Co-ordinator for the UK Sports Institute.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

India

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make a statement about the (a) medical supplies and (b) other help the UK sent to India following the recent earthquake there. [157411]

Clare Short: During my statement in the House on Monday 29 January I announced an overall allocation of up to £10 million to support the emergency relief effort in Gujarat without reducing spending in other parts of India. To date nearly £9 million of the total allocation has been spent.

We provided immediate support to the Search and Rescue effort with a UK team of 69 personnel as well as supporting the Russian Ministry of Emergencies to deploy a team of 75 with an airmobile hospital. In addition we transported numerous relief items to the region (on behalf of agencies such as the Red Cross and Save the Children Fund) including medical supplies, tents and plastic sheeting. We have also channelled funds through a number of agencies for the provision of essential relief items such as tents, blankets, medical supplies, food, water and sanitation. We also established an Emergency Field Office in Gujarat to monitor DFID funded projects and ensure effective targeting of relief assistance.

TREASURY

Homosexual Couples

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to treat inheritance tax for homosexual couples in the same way as for heterosexuals. [157486]

Dawn Primarolo: The inheritance tax rules make no special provision for couples, whatever their sexual orientation. Spouse relief is available for transfers between partners in a marriage; we have no plans to alter the scope of this relief.

Office of Government Commerce

Mr. Ian Stewart: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what targets have been set for the OGCbuying.solutions trading fund for 2001–02. [158058]

Mr. Andrew Smith: I am pleased to announce that the new Office of Government Commerce trading fund, OGCbuying.solutions, came into being on 3 April 2001. The new trading fund is based on The Buying Agency, but includes certain managed services provided in the past by the Central Computer and Telecommunications Agency. I announced the creation of OGCbuying.solutions in a written answer on 19 December 2000, Official Report, column 162W.

I have set the following challenging targets for the trading fund for 2001–02.

OGCbuying.solutions: Targets for 2001–02

1. By comparison over a representative basket of goods and services bought regularly by central Government, the Agency will demonstrate that it offers on average a 5 per cent. price advantage, on a like for like basis, to users of its contracts.
2. The Agency will put in place tools to measure and an action plan to improve the match between its range of contracts and the needs of central civil Government.
3. The Agency will increase the proportion of its business done with central civil Government by 10 per cent. by 31 March.
4. The Agency will ensure 90 per cent. of the goods and services offered through its catalogues are available for electronic ordering by customers. Furthermore the Agency will put in place an incentivisation scheme aimed at increasing dramatically the take-up of e-commerce by its customers.
5. The Agency will achieve levels of customer satisfaction above 90 per cent. as measured by regular customer feedback.
6. The Agency will generate 8 per cent. Return On Capital Employed (ROCE).
7. To explore options for collaborative PPP arrangements to implement an e-commerce system to enhance the service to customers.

A copy of the new framework document for OGCbuying.solutions has been placed in the Libraries of both Houses. A copy of their business plan for 2001 can be found on their website: http://ogcbuyingsolutions.gov.uk.

Valuation Office Agency

Barbara Follett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what targets for the Valuation Office Agency will be set for the year 2001–02. [158060]

Dawn Primarolo: I have set the following key targets for the Valuation Office Agency.

UK Debt Management Office

Mrs. Lawrence: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish the UK Debt Management Office's targets and business plan for 2001–02. [158059]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The DMO's targets for 2001–02 are as set out. The range of targets has been extended somewhat since 2000–01 to reflect the development of the DMO's responsibilities. The DMO is today also publishing its Business Plan for 2001–02. Copies have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

Targets for the Debt Management Office 2001–02

To ensure full compliance with the Government's remit for the DMO as set out in the Debt and Reserves Management Report 2001–02, within the tolerances and subject to the review triggers notified separately to the Office and consistent with the objectives of monetary policy.

To ensure that the maximum time taken to issue the results of gilt auctions does not exceed 40 minutes, that for structured Treasury Bill tenders does not exceed 30 minutes, and that for ad hoc Treasury Bill or other tenders does not exceed 15 minutes, while achieving complete accuracy.

To achieve complete accuracy, within agreed accounting tolerances, in the recording and reporting or transactions through the Department Management Account (DMA), and in delivering money (and reconciling payments) to the National Loans Fund (NLF).

To acknowledge all letters and e-mail inquiries from the public within five working days and for at least 95 per cent. to be sent a substantive reply within two weeks.

To achieve less than eight breaches of the operational market notices (excluding any breaches that the Treasury accept were beyond control of the Office).

To ensure that the qualifications that the National Audit Office (NAO) have made in respect of the accounts of the Gilt-edged Official Operations Account are satisfactorily addressed in the running and presentation of the DMA; and that the 1999–2001 DMA accounts are presented to the NAO by the statutory deadline.

To ensure that the statutory constraint on DMO market borrowing (not to exceed its deposits with the NLF and Bank of England) is always met.

To ensure that, where there is a late change in the forecast, any necessary use of end-of-day borrowing or lending facilities is notified by the due time.

To ensure that instructions to counterparties, agents and external systems are complete, accurate and timely, and that monitoring of the progress of transactions through to settlement is effective, so that DMO achieves at least 99 per cent. (by value) successful settlement of agreed trades on the due date.

To achieve 100 per cent. accuracy in material published on the DMO website (in so far as the material is under the control of the DMO and not third parties).

Tax Credits (Fraud)

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many people have been (a) subjected to a financial penalty and (b) prosecuted because of a fraudulent claim for the Working Families Tax Credit. [157081]

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many prosecutions for fraud in claiming Working Families Tax Credit and Child Tax Credit have taken place; and how many are pending. [157137]

Dawn Primarolo: To date, there have been 16 prosecutions in respect of Working Families Tax Credit, two of which have been concluded through the courts. Approximately 300 financial penalties have been levied.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Johnny Adair

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what the result was of his inquiry into an attempt to poison Mr. Johnny Adair in Maghaberry Prison; and what actions have been taken as a result. [156154]

Mr. Ingram: Following receipt of information from the Forensic Science Agency on 6 March 2001 that the sample of Mr. Adair's protein supplement powder, sent away for analysis, was contaminated, Mr. Adair and the RUC were notified immediately. Due to the potentially serious nature of the incident the RUC was then requested to carry out an investigation, which is still on-going.

It would be inappropriate to comment on the circumstances surrounding the incident at this stage.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

General Mediterranean Holdings Ltd.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will provide details of the (a) grants and (b) export credits awarded to (i) General Mediterranean Holdings Ltd. and (ii) its associate companies. [156884]

Mr. Caborn [holding answer 4 April 2001]: ECGD has no record of any dealings with this company or any other of its listed subsidiaries.

Selective Assistance (Blyth Valley)

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what selective assistance grants he has provided to Blyth Valley since May 1997. [157294]

Mr. Caborn: The two main forms of selective assistance available to business in Blyth Valley are Regional Selective Assistance (RSA) and the new Enterprise Grant (EG) launched in January 2000. Details of take up in Blyth Valley are given in the tables.

	Applications	Grant (£)	Capital expenditure (£)	Jobs

Supermarkets

Mr. Donaldson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what progress he has made towards publishing a code of practice for supermarket chains to regulate their dealings with suppliers in the farming sector. [157578]

Dr. Howells: The Office of Fair Trading is currently consulting with supermarkets and the representatives of suppliers and farmers on a draft Code of Practice. The Director General will advise my right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry on the terms of the Code of Practice on the completion of this consultation.

Departmental Policies (Manchester, Gorton)

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will set out, with statistical information relating as directly as possible to the constituency, the effects on the Manchester, Gorton constituency of his Department's policies and actions since 20 November 2000. [154495]

Mr. Caborn: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, answered my right hon. Friend's similar question on 20 November 2000, Official Report, column 70W, explaining that the DTI does not maintain such statistical information.

My right hon. Friend may wish to be aware that in the north-west region the DTI's policies have contributed to growth in employment by 107,000 and a fall in unemployment by 63,000; reductions in youth unemployment by 75 per cent. and long-term unemployment by 54 per cent. since 2 May 1997.

Miners' Compensation

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations (a) he has made to Healthcall Ltd. and (b) he has received from other organisations, concerning the fee paid to consultants by Healthcall Ltd. for the medical assessment of ex-miners. [157581]

Mr. Hain: Following discussions with the solicitors representing the miners, and in light of the need to attract more Respiratory Specialists to undertake medical assessments, the Department asked the Medical Reference Panel (MRP), the panel of respiratory specialists that advises the Department and claimants' solicitors on the Coal Health Compensation Scheme, to advise on appropriate rates for the work done. They proposed a rate based on the British Medical Association (BMA) scales. Healthcall has revised its rates accordingly. The rate for centre-based assessments has been increased significantly.

Rates for domiciliary visits and deceased assessments were already in line with the proposed new rates and have not changed. The revised rate, which has been agreed by the MRP, will be effective from 1 April, and will be reviewed in three months' time. Healthcall is also investigating how doctors can be used more flexibly to get greater volumes of MAPs completed.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what the waiting list is for ex-miners awaiting first appointments for their assessment for compensation in each assessment centre in Wales; and what was the corresponding figure on 30 October 2000. [155641]

Mr. Hain [holding answer 27 March 2001]: The number of claimants awaiting their first assessment appointment to be made on 28 February 2001 was as follows:

	Test centre
28 February 2001	Newport	Cardiff	Swansea	Mountain Ash	Wrexham	Ammanford[1]
Claimants mailed	5,425	316	4,698	5,127	570	—
Claimants to be mailed	35	33	223	633	11	121
Total appointments made	4,776	221	4,138	4,645	463	—
No reply to Healthcall appointment letter	273	22	251	280	9	—
Claimants awaiting appointment/to be tested[2]	684	128	783	1,115	118	121

[1] Ammanford did not open until 1 March 2001.
[2] Claimants awaiting appointments = (claimants mailed – total appointments made) + claimants to be mailed.
Note:
New claims are currently still being received at over 1,000 per week. For week commencing 5 March 2001, 1,600 new claims were received.

Figures on the numbers of claimants waiting to be mailed are calculated only at the end of each month in a continuously updated format and not stored. Therefore the number of claimants waiting to be mailed on 30 October 2000 is not available. Of those claimants that had been mailed by 30 October 2000, the following numbers were awaiting their first assessment appointment to be made:

	Test centre
30 October 2000	Newport	Cardiff	Swansea	Mountain Ash	Wrexham
Claimants mailed	5,399	305	4,508	4,806	479
Claimants to be mailed	—	—	—	—	—
Total appointments made	4,724	214	3,872	4,083	348
No reply to Healthcall appointment letter	255	28	370	521	121
Claimants awaiting appointment/to be tested[1]	675	91	636	723	131

[1] Claimants awaiting appointments = claimants mailed – total appointments made.

Mr. Todd: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment he has made of the performance of the contractor managing British Coal's employment records in relation to mineworkers' compensation claims. [156224]

Mr. Hain: The Department continually monitors the performance of Ha[illegible] Information Management, the company contracted [illegible] provide copies of miners' employment records.

Getting copies of employment records has proved difficult because British Coal records are stored on very antiquated microfiche and in paper systems. The volumes of records returned have been less than planned and the Department therefore embarked on two major projects to scan the earnings records from microfiche into a database and to scan the whole of the employment records pack.

Unfortunately, there have been problems with scanning but these have now been addressed and the volume of records scanned is rising. Hays will provide an increased level of photocopied records until scanned records hit their required targets.

Post Office Counters (Tribunals)

Mr. Page: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many employment tribunals involving Post Office Counters are awaiting hearing; how many employment tribunal cases are unresolved in the Manchester area; and what steps he is taking to resolve these cases. [157004]

Mr. Alan Johnson [holding answer 5 April 2001]: I understand that there are currently 18 employment tribunal cases involving Post Office Counters Ltd. that are awaiting hearing. These concern either Post Office Counters Ltd.'s directly employed staff or subpostmasters and other agents. Post Office Counters Ltd.'s legal agents in Manchester are currently dealing with six cases in the North West. A further employment tribunal case in the Manchester area has gone to appeal. Legal decisions on how the law applies in particular circumstances are for the tribunals and courts.

Mr. Page: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what the legal costs were for 2000 to Post Office Counters in representation at employment tribunals. [157005]

Mr. Alan Johnson [holding answer 5 April 2001]: Details of the legal costs of Post Office Counters Ltd. are commercially confidential, under Exemption 13 of the Code of Practice on Access to Public Information.

Fish Genetics

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the research programmes into fish genetics that his Department has been involved with in the last 10 years. [157274]

Mr. Alan Johnson: The Department is supporting the FISHSENSE project in the LINK Cell Engineering programme. The aim of this project is to develop a bioassay for environmental toxicity testing using cell lines from the bluegill sunfish which have been successfully transfected with the luciferase gene from the firefly. These transfected cells are used to assay for the presence of various toxicants by measuring the light produced by the luminescent luciferase protein.

In addition, I understand that the Research Councils, supported by this Department, have been and are funding a number of relevant projects.

Britain-Israel Trade Missions

Mr. Stephen Twigg: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many Britain/Israel trade missions have taken place in each of the last six years. [R] [156893]

Mr. Caborn: The table summarises the supported trade missions from the UK to Israel that have taken place in each of the last six years.

Year	Number of missions
1995	6
1996	8
1997	8
1998	8
1999	11
2000	7

Note:
There have also been other trade missions that were not supported by my Department.

Advantage West Midlands

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what funding for April 2001 to March 2002 is unallocated by Advantage West Midlands; and if he will make a statement on the single regeneration budget. [157115]

Mr. Caborn: The information requested is as follows:

Funding during the 2001–02 financial year

Advantage West Midlands' total programme budget for the 2001–02 financial year is £148,135,000 gross. In addition, in its Corporate Plan it has identified £10,823,000 committed expenditure from the last financial year which will be transferred into the 2001–02 financial year. The Corporate Plan identifies £143,665,000 expenditure already committed and sets out the Agency's plans for using the uncommitted funding in support of the Regional Strategy.

Single Regeneration Budget

In the Spending Review 2000, RDAs were given considerable additional funding and flexibilities to deliver their regional strategies, whose primary purpose is to enhance the region's competitiveness through sustainable economic development, regeneration and business growth. A key flexibility is the introduction of a single budget from April 2002, which will subsume all current RDA funding streams. There will not, therefore, be a national SRB bidding round for new schemes in 2001–02.

Those RDAs with sufficient resources, after commitments from earlier SRB rounds are taken into account, have been invited to put forward proposals for using funds from their SRB expenditure line in their Corporate Plans for 2001–02. Each RDA will be able to decide on its own approach, which will contribute to the development of the RDAs' regional strategies.

RDAs will be expected to meet their commitments to schemes from SRB Rounds 1–6 from their single budget.

Motor Vehicle Repairs

Mr. Stevenson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what regulations govern the use of non-original equipment parts in motor vehicle body repairs. [157124]

Mr. Hill: I have been asked to reply.

None. However some other vehicle parts, such as tyres, brake linings and lamps have to meet minimum European safety standards. These standards are applied equally to both original equipment parts and non-original equipment parts.

CHURCH COMMISSIONERS

Foot and Mouth

Mr. Martlew: To ask the hon. Member for Middlesbrough, representing the Church Commissioners, if the Commissioners will suspend rent payments on those farms which they own on which cases of foot and mouth disease have been confirmed. [157147]

Mr. Stuart Bell: The Commissioners fully recognise the seriousness of the foot and mouth crisis, not least in Cumbria where they have a number of confirmed cases and much of their land is subject to exclusion orders.

Any request to help in case of hardship will be considered on its merits. Tenants who have had cases of foot and mouth confirmed among their livestock, as well as those who are subject to consequential losses, will be given sympathetic consideration in accordance with the Church Commissioners' long standing policy.

SCOTLAND

Single European Currency

Mr. Grieve: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what recent representations she has made to the Chancellor of the Exchequer regarding the impact of a single European currency on the Scottish economy. [145642]

Mrs. Liddell: I have regular discussions with my right hon. Friend on a wide range of issues. The determining factor underpinning any Government decision to join the single currency is whether the economic case is clear and unambiguous. The Government have said that they will make another assessment of the five economic tests early in the next Parliament.

Drug Deaths

Mr. Grieve: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what action her Department is taking in relation to the increase in the number of drug deaths in Scotland. [145643]

Mrs. Liddell: The Government work in partnership with the Scottish Executive to combat the menace of drugs in Scotland.

Reduction of drug-related deaths is a key objective of the Scottish Executive's drug strategy "Tackling Drugs in Scotland: Action in Partnership" which was published in March 1999.

Winter Deaths

Mr. Grieve: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if she will make a statement on the (a) number of and (b) trends in excess winter deaths in Scotland since May 1997. [145663]

Mrs. Liddell: The collection of statistics on excess winter deaths in Scotland is a devolved matter.

Fuel poverty contributes to the number of excess winter deaths among pensioners. The UK Government and the Scottish Executive have been working together to tackle fuel poverty and the Government and the devolved Administrations recently published a UK Fuel Poverty Strategy. The Government have taken direct action to help older households with their fuel bills by increasing the Winter Fuel Allowance to £200. EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Nursery Places (Wansbeck)

Mr. Denis Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many free nursery places have been created for three and four-year-olds in Wansbeck since 1997. [153144]

Ms Hodge: As figures are not held for each individual constituency, the information provided relates to Northumberland local education authority area.

Since September 1998, all four-year-olds in Northumberland have been able to access a free, part-time, early education place. By March 2004, we expect all three-year-olds in Northumberland will have this entitlement.

The following table shows how many free early education places have been made available for three and four-year-olds since 1997 in Northumberland.

Year	Number of places available	Percentage of children
1997–98	5,902	83
1998–99	5,833	83
1999–2000	5,600	81
2000–01	5,713	83

In 2001–02 Northumberland will receive additional funding of £702,108 to provide places for 591 three-year-olds. This is in addition to the places that the authority will make available through their own resources (including Standard Spending Assessment).

The figures include those funded through the nursery education grant and the LEAs own resources (including Standard Spending Assessment).The drop in the number of places since 1997–98 is due to demographic changes in the number of three and four-year-olds.

In addition to early education places, since April 1999, 1,072 new child care places have been created in the Northumberland area.

Child Care Places (Shrewsbury and Atcham)

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many child care places there were in Shrewsbury and Atcham on (a) 1 May 1997 and (b) the latest available dates for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement. [154647]

Ms Hodge: Details of the number of child care places are not available by constituency. Between May 1997 and March 1999, the National Childcare Strategy created 7,855 child care places in the West Midlands. Since April 1999 local Early Years Development and Childcare Partnerships have provided details of the new child care places that have opened by constituency. Between April 1999 and December 2000 Shropshire Early Years Development and Childcare Partnership have reported the creation of 142 new child care places in the Shrewsbury and Atcham area.

Since 1997, 1,639 new early education places have been created for three and four-year-olds in the Shropshire area[1].

[1] Shropshire split into two authorities from April 1998. The figure for early education places for three and four-year-olds relates to the combined Shropshire authority area that existed in April 1997.

Child Care Places (Leeds, Central)

Mr. Hilary Benn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what has been the total number of (a) new early education places for three year olds and (b) new child care places created in the Leeds, Central parliamentary constituency since May 1997. [156747]

Ms Hodge [holding answer 3 April 2001]: As figures for early years education places are not held by individual constituencies, the information provided relates to Leeds local education authority.

The overall proportion of three-year olds in the Leeds area able to access a free, part time, early education place was 66 per cent. in May 1997. All three-year olds in Leeds will be able to access a free early education place from this month. 1,621 additional early education places were created for three-year olds in Leeds local education authority between May 1997 and March 2001.

Child care figures by constituency are only available from April 1999. 208 new child care places have been created in Leeds, Central since April 1999. Between May 1997 and March 1999 the National Childcare Strategy created 7,759 child care places in Yorkshire and Humberside.

LEA Funding

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on local education authority funding for 2001–02. [156859]

Ms Estelle Morris: The overall increase in Education Standard Spending (ESS) in 2001–02 is over £1 billion. In addition to the increase in ESS, the Government are also increasing Standards Fund grant by over £400 million; and following the recent budget announcement schools will also benefit from an increase of £350 million in direct grants. Taken together all these increases represent an 8 per cent. cash increase in revenue support for authorities and their schools next year, a real terms increase of £200 per pupil.

The schools' capital allocation for 2001–02 is £2.2 billion: this is part of an allocation of £8.5 billion over the three years covered by the Year 2000 Spending Review.

Since 1997, funding has increased by £540 per pupil in real terms. Under the last Government, funding per pupil fell by £80 in real terms between 1994–95 and 1997–98. The total increase following the Year 2000 Spending Review will be around £750 between 1997–98 and 2003–04.

While we have been increasing resources to education authorities, we have been reviewing the formula for allocating funds to local authorities. We are currently working on a reformed system, with the aim of moving towards it in 2002–03.

Early Years Education (Amber Valley)

Judy Mallaber: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what has been the total number of (a) new early years education places for three year olds and (b) new child care places created in Amber Valley since May 1997. [157119]

Ms Hodge: Between spring 1998 and spring 2001 3,435 additional, free, early years places have been created for three-year-olds in the Derbyshire local education authority area[1]. These places were funded either through Nursery Education Grant funding or from the Authority's own resources.

Between May 1997 and March 1999, the National Childcare Strategy created 5,901 child care places in the East Midlands. Since April 1999 local Early Years Development and Childcare Partnerships have provided information by constituency of all new child care places except for child minder places. Between April 1999 and December 2000 Derbyshire Early Years Development and Childcare Partnership have reported the creation of 548 new child care places in Amber Valley. During that same period 261 new child minder places were created across the Derbyshire local education authority area.

[1] As a result of boundary changes and the creation of a new unitary authority in Derby City, meaningful figures are only available from January 1998 onwards.

The locations for the roadshows were chosen to allow a good spread across the country to enable as many schools, teachers and governors to participate as possible.No further roadshows are planned for the next two months. We will continue to seek opportunities to raise the profile of ICT in education and to share good practice, and may decide to run a further series of similar events in the coming year.

Ms Estelle Morris: The Teaching Awards 2001 are run by an independent charity, The Teaching Awards Trust, in partnership with BT and other private sponsors. I understand that the national ceremony is due to take place on 28 October after a series of good practice workshops on 27 October. The Teaching Awards Trust has not yet secured a venue for this event, although it is likely to be in central London.

Nurseries (Funding)

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on the eligibility for additional funding of nurseries and playgroups designed to enable them to extend their hours and services, announced by the Prime Minister on 26 March. [157712]

Ms Hodge: My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister specifically announced that an extra £15 million over three years is being made available for maintained nursery schools to extend the services they offer to include out of hours child care facilities, services for a wider age range of children, and family services. This will help around 45,000 children and their families.

My right hon. Friend also announced that £4 million over 12 months will be made available to provide support for playgroups and other early years or child care providers in England intending to expand their services from the traditional two and a half hours early education and/or care session to provide a longer day care facility. This will help around 15,000 children and their families by creating more child care places and providing greater choice, flexibility and quality child care facilities.

Through the Neighbourhood Nursery initiative, Early Excellence Centre, Sure Start and other programmes we will create, and encourage others to create, by 2004, up to 100,000 new full-time integrated nursery education and child care places. These initiatives are available to a range of providers, including nurseries and playgroups.

By March 2004 we plan to have spent over £1 billion on child care initiatives, as well as helping lower income working parents to pay for child care through the Working Families Tax Credit, and these resources will contribute to the extension of services for children, including nurseries and playgroups extending their hours.

This guideline has been a force of law by virtue of a Commission Directive 1999/82 and has been incorporated into the United Kingdom domestic law. This guidance note focuses on the cumulative contribution of three factors to the safety of gelatine: the origin of the animals, type of tissue and manufacturing process. It is also recommended that appropriate quality system, such as ISO 9000 certification and Hazard Analysis Critical Control Point, should be put in place for monitoring of the production process and batch delineation. Procedures should also be in place to ensure traceability and to audit suppliers of starting materials.

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what steps he has taken to ensure that gelatine used in soft and hard drug capsules is not contaminated with BSE prions; [143098]

(2) what recent tests his Department has (a) carried out and (b) commissioned to ensure that gelatine used in drug capsules does not contain the prion for BSE. [143099]

Yvette Cooper: Gelatine used for formulating medicines can be sourced from porcine and bovine hides (skin) and bovine bones. Acid process is applied to bovine bones, hides and porcine skins. An alkaline process is used to produce soft gelatine.

There are no tests designed specifically to detect BSE agent in gelatine.

Independent Advocacy Services

Joan Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how the Independent Advocacy Services will be (a) commissioned, (b) funded and (c) provided. [155953]

Ms Stuart: Subject to legislation in the Health and Social Care Bill, Independent Advocacy Services will be commissioned to assist patients who are making complaints about National Health Service organisations. Patients will be able to access the service directly or may be referred to it by Patient Advocacy Liaison Service or NHS Direct.

The Bill requires that my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State consult the Patients' Council and other relevant bodies on the best approach for a locality before commissioning and funding a service.

Beef Imports

Mr. Todd: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he is taking to review the Fresh Meat (Beef Controls) Regulations 1996; and if he will list the countries from which over-30-month beef may be imported. [156484]

Ms Stuart: The Fresh Meat (Beef Controls) (No 2) Regulations 1996 set out the generally applicable ban on the sale for human consumption of beef from cattle aged over thirty months at slaughter (OTM rule).

As far as United Kingdom slaughterings are concerned, I am advised by the Food Standards Agency (FSA) that, as recommended in its review of BSE controls, it intends to review in August 2001 the effectiveness of the tightened animal feed controls introduced in August 1996 and the evidence of BSE incidence five years after that time. Depending on the outcome of that review, it is anticipated that it may be possible in early 2002 for the FSA to advise the date of birth of cattle that need not enter the OTM scheme and which could be sold for human consumption. This date of birth could not be earlier than August 1996 when the enhanced feed ban was implemented. Such a change could not be introduced unilaterally but would require the agreement of the European Commission and other member states.

Beef from cattle aged OTM at slaughter may be imported from any country but it may only be sold for human consumption if it comes from animals that were born, reared and slaughtered in Argentina, Australia, Botswana, Brazil, Mauritius, Namibia, New Zealand, Paraguay, Poland, South Africa, Swaziland, Uruguay, United States of America and Zimbabwe. These are countries that historically supplied the UK and in which there was no history of BSE. The review of BSE controls recognised the need to keep up to date the list of countries that are considered to be BSE free and I am advised by the FSA that it is being reviewed in the light of recent European Union assessments of geographical risk.

Copies of the FSA's review of BSE controls are available in the Library.

Urologist Consultants

Mr. Pound: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many urologist consultants are projected to be in post in 2005. [157086]

Mr. Denham: Figures from the specialty workforce advisory group show that the number of consultants in the urology specialty in England and Wales is set to increase from 442 in 1999 to 570 in 2005, an increase of nearly a third.

Mr. Pound: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many consultant urologist posts there were in the NHS in (a) 1990, (b) 1995 and (c) 2000; and how many of those posts were vacant. [157109]

Mr. Denham: The number of consultant urologists in each year mentioned is set out in the table.

EU Tobacco Directive

Dr. Whitehead: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if it is his intention to apply for a derogation until 2007 for the EU Directive on the manufacture, presentation and sale of tobacco products. [156798]

Yvette Cooper [holding answer 4 April 2001]: The Directive on manufacture, presentation and sale of tobacco products, once adopted, will permit member states to delay applying new tar, carbon monoxide and nicotine limits to cigarettes intended for export outside the European Community until January 2007. We will consult in due course on the details of transposing the Directive into United Kingdom law, including the length of the transitional period for third country exports. Ministers will take a final decision in the light of that consultation.

Dr. Whitehead: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if it is the intention of the Government to publish its preferred position on derogation of the implementation of the EU Directive on the manufacture, presentation and sale of tobacco products prior to consultations on the transposition of the directive into UK law. [156799]

Yvette Cooper [holding answer 4 April 2001]: We will consult on the policy options for transposing this Directive into United Kingdom law in due course, including the length of any derogations. Ministers will then take final decisions in the light of that consultation.

Care Homes

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects to publish the national minimum standards for care homes for adults; and if he will make a statement. [157280]

Mr. Hutton: We hope to be able to publish the consultation document on the care homes regulations and the national minimum standards for care homes for younger adults and adult placements in the next few weeks.

Child Sex Abuse

Ms Julie Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 12 March 2001, Official Report, column 423W, how many local authorities have access within their local areas to specialist services for children who sexually abuse other children. [157363]

Mr. Hutton [holding answer 6 April 2001]: The information requested is not held centrally.

Under section 17 of the Children Act 1989 it is the duty of every local authority to safeguard and promote the welfare of children within their area who are in need. Children who sexually abuse other children are likely to have considerable, often complex, needs.

Consequently, children who sexually abuse other children may receive a whole range of services from several different agencies including social services, Youth Offending Teams, health authorities and voluntary organisations.

Consultancy Payments

Mr. Stephen O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the total gross running costs were to his Department of fees and disbursements paid to consultants (a) in the period February 1996 to January 1997 and (b) in the financial year 1996–97. [157614]

Ms Stuart: The Department's expenditure on external management consultants in the financial year 1996–97 was £15.789 million.

The Department does not hold the 1996 data in a form that would allow us to calculate the consultancy spend over the specific period February 1996 to January 1997.

Newcastle City Health Trust

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what deficit he expects in respect of (a) elderly and (b) rehabilitation services of the former Newcastle City Health Trust; if (i) bridging and (ii) brokerage finance has been agreed; and if the successor trusts will receive similar support. [157100]

Mr. Hutton: The Newcastle City Health National Health Service Trust is forecasting a revenue breakeven position for 2000–01. Information on the financial position of individual service components of the trust is not held centrally.

The trust received £1 million assistance in respect of the Newcastle strategic review (NSR) bridging arrangements, which was partially funded from national special assistance funding. This funding is non-repayable. In addition, the trust received £1.8 million cash in March 2001, which will become repayable in April 2001 from successor organisations as part of the management of year end balances in the local health economy. Newcastle and North Tyneside health authority is to receive £2.5 million national special assistance in 2001–02.

Bed Closures (Newcastle)

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when, and by whom, it was decided to close beds at Hunters Moor Hospital, Newcastle; on what grounds the decision was taken; and when those beds will be reopened. [157102]

Mr. Hutton: Northgate and Prudhoe National Health Service Trust agreed in October 2000 to upgrade the facilities for patients as soon as possible after they began to manage the rehabilitation services provided at Hunters Moor Hospital, as requested by both Newcastle and North Tyneside health authority and Newcastle community health council. Work to upgrade facilities began in December and five beds were closed at that time. Three beds reopened as work progressed and as of 4 April all beds were open.

Newcastle, North Tyneside and Northumberland Trust

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health who has been appointed Chair and non-executive directors of the Newcastle, North Tyneside and Northumberland Neuro-rehabilitation Trust. [157101]

Mr. Hutton: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has appointed Ms Sue Whittaker to chair the new Newcastle, North Tyneside and Northumberland Mental Health National Health Service Trust until 30 November

2004. An announcement on the appointment of four of the non-executive directors of the new trust will be made very shortly.

Newcastle (Strategic Review)

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when decisions were taken to (a) establish the Newcastle Acute Services Review, (b) replace the present Northern Centre for Cancer Treatment, Newcastle and (c) replace the present Hunters Moor Hospital, Newcastle; when the outline business cases were submitted for (b) and (c); and when he will invite bids for the work. [157015]

Mr. Hutton: The Newcastle strategic review (NSR), as a strategy, was approved by Ministers in December 1993. The first support to its capital investment implications commenced in 1995, with the start of an allocation of £8.4 million of "fast track" capital to commence movement of acute services off the Newcastle General Hospital site. Confirmation of the support to larger scale capital investment was provided by the approval of the second wave strategic outline case (SOC) in April 1998, revisions to which were approved in September 1999.

The 1993 NSR strategy document did not include provision for the relocation of the northern centre for cancer treatment (NCCT) from the Newcastle General Hospital site. It became subsequently apparent as acute services were relocated off the Newcastle General Hospital site that the NCCT would become increasingly isolated from access to surgery, medicine, anaesthetics, critical care and other clinical services. Consequently, the subsequent SOC (approved in April 1998) included the reprovision of the NCCT on the Freeman Hospital site.

Public consultation was undertaken during Summer 2000 on the reconfiguration of neuro-disability services for the northern part of the region. In September 2000 Newcastle and North Tyneside health authority supported the option to reprovide the services including those currently provided at Hunters Moor Hospital with new facilities on the Walkergate Hospital site.

The business cases for the main elements of the NSR (which includes reprovision of the NCCT) were received on 14 February 2001. The date for when bids for the work will be sought is dependent on the completion of the refinement of the outline business cases, which is now being undertaken by the trust and health authority.

Although a business case for the development at Walkergate is in preparation, a definitive version has not yet been submitted to the regional office of the National Health Service Executive for approval. Consequently it is not yet possible to say when bids for this scheme will be invited.

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many NHS vacancies there were for (a) doctors, (b) nurses, (c) midwives, (d) health visitors, (e) professions allied to medicine and (f) management and administration staff for each of the last 10 years for which figures are available; how many posts in each category have been vacant for longer than three months; and if he will make a statement. [157323]

Mr. Denham: The Department has collected data on the number of posts that have been vacant for three months or more as at 31 March in 1999 and 2000. The information is in the table.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Private Security Industry Bill

11. Mr. Michael Jabez Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proposals he has for licensing wheel-clampers. [156030]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The Private Security Industry Bill, which was introduced in the House last month, sets out proposals to regulate private wheel-clampers. Under the Bill anyone engaged in wheel-clamping by way of business or employment or for monetary gain will need to obtain a licence from the regulatory authority which is also being set up under the legislation.

Ms Dari Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received regarding the Private Security Industry Bill. [156054]

Mr. Charles Clarke: We have received representations from a number of organisations and individuals including:

companies and individuals working in the private security industry;

local authorities and their associations;

Members of Parliament;

Members of the House of Lords; representative bodies in the leisure industry;

the police;

trade and professional associations;

trade unions; and members of the public.

The representations related to a number of provisions of the Bill, including the regulation of in-house manned guards and other sectors of the industry, wheel-clamping and the licensing of security companies.

Mr. Hope: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on his plans for regulation of club and pub doormen. [156038]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The Private Security Industry Bill provides for the establishment of a Security Industry Authority which will have responsibility for licensing individuals employed in designated sectors of the security industry, including door supervisors.

The Authority will be responsible for establishing a licensing regime for all door supervisors. This will involve setting national criteria, in consultation with the police, industry and local authorities, which will be used in deciding whether to grant a licence. Initially the criteria will involve a criminal record check, but it is envisaged that over time additional criteria relating to training and similar issues will be imposed. This aim is to ensure that only fit and proper people receive licences to operate as door supervisors. Those who do not meet the published criteria will be refused licences.

Clubbers (Safe Havens)

12. Dr. Gibson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to encourage safe havens for clubbers. [156031]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Following the sad deaths of three young men in Norwich, we welcome and support the local initiative to provide a refuge for vulnerable young people who are affected by alcohol on busy clubbing nights; we will see what wider lessons can be learned from it.

Hilda Murrell

13. Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department pursuant to his answer of 9 March 2001, Official Report, column 386W, on Hilda Murrell, if he will make a statement on the staged examinations of samples being carried out by the Forensic Science Service. [156032]

Mr. Charles Clarke: West Mercia constabulary and the Forensic Science Service are working together on a structured approach to the examination of all potential DNA-bearing material relating to this case. This has involved setting up a staged process applying the DNA techniques in a priority order so as to conserve as far as possible samples for future analysis if the current tests are unsuccessful. The examinations have been carefully prioritised and are being undertaken in a sequential manner using the latest DNA techniques such as Second Generation Multiplex Plus and the more sophisticated Low Copy Number.

As I indicated in my answer of 9 March 2001, Official Report, column 386W, so far the test results have provided no positive results. The samples currently under examination are being processed as a Major Crime Service priority using the Low Copy Number method. The results of these tests are expected in the week beginning 23 April.

Disorderly Licensed Premises

14. Liz Blackman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent discussions he has had with the police regarding powers to close disorderly licensed premises. [156033]

15. Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent discussions he has had with licensees and pub managers about police powers to close disorderly licensed premises. [156034]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: We have discussed on a number of recent occasions with both the Association of Chief Police Officers and the licensed trade the relevant provisions of the Criminal Justice and Police Bill.

Drugs (Tower Hamlets)

16. Ms Oona King: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what initiatives his Department has supported in Tower Hamlets to combat the drugs problem. [156035]

Mr. Boateng: We have supported the work of the Drugs Action Team with:

some £36,000 last year and this, for support and co-ordination;

some £64,000 for this year as the Home Office contribution to supporting services for young people under Drugs Action Team planning requirements;

£180,000 over the next three years for a community development project on the Ocean Estate; over £76,000 last year and likely the same this for arrest referral schemes;

some £580,000 this year for treatment provision, to which the Home Office has made significant contribution.

In addition, there will be a Tower Hamlets allocation—yet to be decided—from the £220 million announced for action against local drugs markets.

Business Watch Schemes

17. Mr. Bill O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what advice and assistance his Department offers to business watch schemes; and if he will make a statement. [156036]

Mr. Charles Clarke: We do not provide any direct formal or financial assistance to business watch schemes, and there are no central records available as to the number of such schemes. We do, of course, welcome any such initiatives to combat crime. Among the projects to assist business to reduce crime is Business Crime Check which seeks to create, maintain and promote a database of information relevant to those who wish to reduce crime against business.

The Home Department is also intending to launch later this month a Business and Retail Crime Toolkit. This is one of 22 Toolkits that are designed to help provide local crime and disorder partnerships, and the wider community, with information about different crimes and ways to help tackle them. As well as outlining the main crimes affecting business this will include a guide to best practice in combating such crimes. It will also include information on how to go about setting up a project to tackle a problem as well accessing possible sources of funding.

Severe Personality Disorders

18. Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on progress made in agreeing protocols between health authorities and police on information exchange regarding individuals with severe personality disorders. [156037]

Mr. Boateng: It is vital for the effective protection of the public that there should be effective arrangements for information-sharing, between all the agencies involved, about anyone who may pose a serious risk to others because of a personality disorder or other mental disorder. In some parts of England and Wales health authorities do take part in the work of Multi-Agency Risk Panels and Public Protection Panels. In others, concerns about breaking professional codes of practice relating to patient confidentiality have prevented them from doing so. In the White Paper "Reforming the Mental Health Act", published on 20 December last year, we made it clear that new mental health legislation will create a statutory duty covering the disclosure of information between agencies in these circumstances.

Human Rights Act

19. Mr. Paterson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the implications of the Human Rights Act 1998 for the maintenance of law and order. [156039]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The Human Rights Act will help the maintenance of law and order by the development of a culture of rights and responsibilities across the United Kingdom.

Robberies

20. Mr. Stephen O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what measures he is taking to reduce the number of robberies committed in England and Wales. [156040]

Mr. Charles Clarke: We are determined to reduce the number of robberies. That is why we have given the five metropolitan forces an additional £20 million specifically to assist their efforts in tackling robbery, and have set them the challenging target of a 14 per cent. reduction of robbery in our principal cities by March 2005. The additional funds have enabled those forces to introduce a number of new initiatives and to reinforce good practice.

My right hon. Friend the Home Secretary has also launched a separate initiative with the police and the mobile phone industry to crack down on robbery of mobile phones. We have also published a Robbery Toolkit which is available to all forces and those involved in crime reduction and community safety and will help them to work as effectively as possible in tackling robbery.

Drugs Education Programmes

21. Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make extra funds available to police forces to advise on drugs education programmes. [156042]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Drugs education in schools is a matter for the Secretary of State for Education and Employment. The police can, and do, support schools, but this must come from existing and planned provision.

Asylum Seekers

22. Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the number of applications for political asylum in the last 12 months. [156043]

Mrs. Roche: There were 75,720 asylum applications made from March 2000 to February 2001.

25. Mr. Blunt: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many asylum seekers who were refused asylum were deported in 2000. [156046]

Mrs. Roche: 8,980 failed asylum seekers were removed or left voluntarily in 2000.

30. Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent representations he has received on the criteria for assessing asylum applications. [156051]

Mrs. Roche: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Home Department receives a number of representations on a wide range of asylum issues, including the application of the 1951 Convention criteria for determining asylum claims.

Each application for asylum is considered on its individual merits to determine whether the applicant can demonstrate a well-founded fear of persecution in a particular country for reasons of race, religion, nationality, membership of a particular social group or political opinion.

31. Mr. Fabricant: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the numbers of asylum seekers in the United Kingdom whose addresses are not known by his Department. [156052]

Mrs. Roche: The precise number of asylum applicants whose address is not known could only be determined by examination of individual case files at disproportionate cost. However, in most cases a contact address is likely to have been given.

32. Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what his policy is on choice of area for the placement of asylum seekers on the basis of local economic conditions. [156053]

Mrs. Roche: Areas that are to be used as clusters are researched centrally by the National Asylum Support Service and there is a full consultation process to enable local authorities, usually through the Regional Consortia, to have input into the decision making process. Each area is considered on its own particular merits and factors such as economic conditions are taken into account. It is not the intention to exacerbate local economic difficulties but to achieve a fair and equitable dispersal.

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many asylum seekers there are in the United Kingdom who have not yet had their application accepted. [156041]

Mrs. Roche: The number of outstanding asylum applications awaiting an initial decision at the end of February 2001 was 49,690.

Crime Reduction

23. Mr. Miller: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the Government's strategy to reduce crime. [156044]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The Government are committed to reducing crime, tackling its causes, ensuring proper punishment of those who break the law and providing the resources necessary to tackle crime. As a result, the British Crime Survey showed that crime fell by 10 per cent. between 1997 and 1999. In addition, the number of police officers rose by 444 in the six months to September 2000.

Crime Statistics

26. Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the level of crime in England and Wales. [156047]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The British Crime Survey (BCS), published on 17 October, shows an overall fall of 10 per cent. in crimes measured by the BCS between 1997 and 1999. The most recently published recorded crime statistics show that in the 12 months to September 2000 there was a fall in recorded crime of 0.2 per cent. In the same period, domestic burglary fell by 10 per cent. and vehicle crime by 7 per cent.

Surrey Police Force

27. Mr. St. Aubyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the funding of Surrey police force. [156048]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Under the police funding settlement for 2001–02 Surrey Police Authority will receive £111 million in central Government supported funding. It will also continue to benefit from the Crime Fighting Fund and Rural Policing Fund. Surrey will receive £2.3 million from the Crime Fighting Fund and £11,048 from the Rural Policing Fund. £220,000 has also been allocated to Surrey under the Targeted Policing Initiative.

The budget set by Surrey Police Authority for 2001–02 is £122.4 million, an increase of 2.1 per cent. (+£2.5 million) over the previous year.

In addition, commencing 1 April the Home Office has agreed to fund 75 per cent. of the cost of the new allowance of £2,000 per annum to be paid to officers serving in the Surrey Police who were appointed on or after 1 September 1994 and who are not in receipt of housing allowance.

Police Recruitment and Retention

28. Maria Eagle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what measures he is taking to improve recruitment and retention of police officers. [156049]

Mr. Charles Clarke: We have established the Crime Fighting Fund (CFF) to enable forces to recruit 9,000 officers over and above the number they had previously planned in the three years 2000–01 to 2002–03. Forces report that about 2,800 CFF officers were recruited in 2000–01.

We have launched the first national police recruitment advertising campaign. There had been over 129,000 responses to the campaign by 25 March 2000 and over 27,000 expressions of interest had been passed to forces.

We are reviewing entry requirements for the Police Service to ensure consistency across forces and a good supply of quality candidates.

In order to improve retention of police officers, we have been considering how we might be able to encourage more officers who have completed 30 years' service but not reached compulsory retirement age, to remain, where they have key skills and experience. Measures to address sickness rates and medical retirement are set out in my answer to the hon. Member for Southwark, North and Bermondsey (Mr. Hughes) on 18 December 2000, Official Report, column 59W.

Measures to improve both retention and recruitment are:

£3,327 per annum increase in London Allowance for officers in the Metropolitan and the City of London police who joined on or after 1 September 1994 and receive no housing allowance; provision (at a cost of £2.45 million next year) of free rail travel within a 70 mile radius of London for Metropolitan police officers; allowances for officers serving in the south-east, as set out in my answer to the hon. Member for Banbury (Mr. Baldry) on 12 March 2001, Official Report, column 485W; the Government's Starter Homes Initiative under which £250 million will be made available over the next three years. Bids covering a number of police force areas have proceeded to Stage 2 of the bidding round.

Violence against Women

29. Mrs. Brinton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on his plans to combat violence against women. [156050]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The Government are determined to reduce all crimes of violence including violence against women. We set out our strategy for doing so in "fighting violent crime together: an action plan" which was published in January.

In support of the action plan, we announced on 23 March an extra £3.7 million to fund a further 24 projects addressing violence against women. This funding is on top of the £7 million announced last summer which provides funding for 34 projects as part of our Crime Reduction Programme. These projects are helping to identify what works best in tackling violence against women, including domestic violence.

In addition to the increased funding, our programme against domestic violence includes, within the last year, guidance to agencies dealing with domestic violence, along with specific guidance to health service professionals; a Home Office circular to the police to build on the progress made in addressing domestic violence and reducing repeat victimisation; inclusion of this issue within police Best Value performance indicators; £120 million additional capital funding for a new Safer Communities Supported Housing Fund for specified vulnerable groups, which includes the survivors of domestic violence; and increased funding for Victim Support.

We are also working with the Association of Chief Police Officers on a circular to the police on the effective use of provisions in the Protection from Harassment Act 1997 with particular regard to domestic violence and violence against women; we are evaluating probation service domestic violence perpetrator programmes; developing a domestic violence toolkit as part of the programme of toolkits on the crime reduction website; and we shall be including a special module on domestic violence as part of the British Crime Survey 2001.

Prison Education Service

35. Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he is taking to improve the prison education service. [156056]

Mr. Boateng: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Stockport (Ms Coffey) on 14 February 2001, Official Report, column 172W.

Local Elections

36. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to extend the pilot schemes on alternative voting arrangements for the local elections. [156057]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: None at present. After only one round of pilots we believe that there is insufficient evidence on which to base an extension of any piloted arrangements. Notices of the local elections for 3 May have now been issued but we look forward to further pilot schemes taking place in the future.

Closed Circuit Television (Nottingham)

37. Mr. Heppell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment has been made of the benefits of CCTV in the suppression of crime in Nottingham. [156058]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Crime Concern have recently published a City-wide strategy for Closed Circuit Television (CCTV) for the Nottingham Community Safety and Youth Justice Partnership. This report is being used to assess the effectiveness of current CCTV systems installed in Nottingham and to decide future deployment.

More generally, police operational experience and general research studies show that CCTV has considerable crime reduction and detection potential, particularly when used as part of a wider strategy.

Schemes funded under the Crime Reduction Programme CCTV Initiative will be evaluated to build up the knowledge base of what works best in what context. Crime and Disorder Reduction Partnerships will also be evaluating schemes locally.

Police Suspensions

38. Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the (a) duration and (b) scale of police officers' suspensions, and the costs of suspensions and subsequent out-of-court settlements made in compensation. [156059]

Mr. Charles Clarke: This information is not held centrally and it could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Alcohol Misuse (Young People)

Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the misuse of alcohol by young people. [156045]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: We are taking decisive action to minimise the impact of alcohol on young people's lives. In the Criminal Justice and Police Bill, we have sought to introduce provisions placing a positive duty on licensees not to sell alcohol to minors and by placing test purchasing of alcohol on a statutory footing for the first time.

MOT Certificates

Mr. Goggins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to review the penalties for failing to obtain a valid MoT certificate. [156055]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The maximum penalty for the offence of driving a motor vehicle without a valid Ministry of Transport (MoT) certificate under section 47 of the Road Traffic Act 1988 is a fine of up to £2,500 in the case of a vehicle adapted to carry more than eight passengers and £1,000 for any other motor vehicle. The maximum penalty for the related, but more serious offence, of forgery of an MoT certificate, under section 173 of the Road Traffic Act 1988, is two years imprisonment. We are conducting a review of Road Traffic Penalties and have now received responses to our consultation paper published last December. In relation to the fraud offence the consultation paper proposes that the existing anomaly whereby imprisonment is not available where the offence is tried in the magistrates court is removed so that a sentence of imprisonment of up to six months is available for summary disposal of these cases. We made no express proposals in respect of the driving without a valid MoT certificate offence but the review continues and we will consider any representations received.

Schengen Agreement

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the nature of the partial declassification of the Schengen documentation. [156974]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The rules on the classification of Council documents, including Schengen documents, are set out in Council Decision 2000/527/EC of 14 August 2000. The vast majority of Schengen documents are categorised as "limite" and are not therefore classified within the meaning of the Decision. The Council considers it necessary to classify certain documents containing sensitive operational information. However, even classified documents are subject to the provisions of Council Decision 93/731/EC of 20 December 1993 on public access to Council documents. Any request for access to a classified document is considered on its merits. A decision to refuse access to classified documents is ultimately subject to review by the Court of Justice in Luxembourg.

Police

Mr. Hilary Benn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department for each police force area in England, what was the force's budget in (a) cash terms and (b) real terms for each year since 1990. [156173]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The information is set out in the table.

Notes:
1994–95 figures for Lincolnshire and Essex and 1995–96 figures for Essex were not available. The compilers adjusted the grand total for comparison.
From 1996–97, expenditure was recorded net of police loan charges grant on pre-April 1990 debt charges.
Loan charge grant for 1993–94 to 1995–96 has been deducted from forces' expenditure for comparative purposes.
Deductions for loan charge grants have been made at the grand total level only for 1990–91 to 1992–93 (ca. £30 million per annum).
Percentage changes have been calculated in real terms at 1999–2000 prices using GDP deflators (March 2001).

Damilola Taylor

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the level of compensation to the parents of Damilola Taylor; and if he will review the guidance relating to levels of compensation. [157440]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Under the terms of the Criminal Injuries Compensation Scheme, the determination of individual applications is entirely a matter for the Criminal Injuries Compensation Authority and the complementary Criminal Injuries Compensation Appeals Panel. Ministers do not comment on, or intervene in, decisions in individual cases.

Under the terms of the Scheme, each qualifying relative of a murder victim receives a fixed fatal award (at level 10 of the tariff, or at level 13 if there is only one eligible claimant). Reasonable funeral expenses are also met, and additional (and sometimes very substantial) compensation is paid where there is financial dependency on the victim, or to replace the services of a murdered parent.

Contrary to the impression conveyed by some recent press coverage of this tragic case, the fixed fatal award does not put a 'value' on the life of a victim. No sum of money could reasonably do that. The fatal award is in the nature of a gesture of condolence on behalf of society. And the award is in fact more generous than the amount payable under the fatal accidents legislation.

We have just completed a thorough review of the Scheme based on the findings from a public consultation exercise that was launched in 1999. On 1 April 2001, having secured the necessary parliamentary approval in March, we brought in a wide-ranging package of improvements, worth £20 million in a full year, to what is already probably by far the most generous scheme in the world.

Responses to the consultation exercise were evenly split on whether there should be any increase to the fixed fatal award. On balance, we decided not to recommend changes to the tariff level at which the fatal award is fixed, although the actual amount payable went up by 10 per cent. from 1 April as a result of a general up-rating of most of the tariff bands.

Wrongful Convictions

Mrs. Ellman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many cases are awaiting a decision by the (a) Criminal Cases Review Commission and (b) Appeal Court in respect of wrongful conviction. [157444]

Mr. Charles Clarke: I understand that at the end of February 2001, the latest date for which figures are available, 1,100 cases were awaiting a decision by the Criminal Cases Review Commission.

Forced Marriages

Ms Moran: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action he has taken as a result of the recent report on forced marriages. [157548]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: 'A Choice by Right', the report of the working group on forced marriage, was published in June last year. It made a number of recommendations for tackling the problem of forced marriage.

Since then we have made progress on a number of fronts. Together with the Foreign and Commonwealth Office we have developed and published a Joint Action Plan to address the overseas dimension of forced marriage. This includes gaining a better understanding of the problem, forging links with agencies overseas and looking at our own procedures for handling these cases.

We are working with colleagues from other Government Departments and non-governmental organisations to develop a package of care for the victims of forced marriage—to give them a real choice and enable them to take appropriate action to address, or escape, the problem.

The work is being overseen by the Inter-departmental Group on Violence against Women and Domestic Violence. The All-Party Parliamentary Group on Domestic Violence have also agreed to take this issue within its remit. Many of the protocols and procedures aimed at tackling domestic violence are also appropriate for dealing with forced marriage.

I hope to be able to make a fuller announcement this month.

Freemasons (Police Service)

Mr. John M. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he plans to make a decision on the compulsory registration of freemasonry in the police service. [157152]

Mr. Charles Clarke: My right hon. Friend the Home Secretary will make a decision as soon as possible following his consideration of the outcome of consultation with the police service about ways of achieving an acceptable rate of registration.

Criminal Records Bureau

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimate he has made of (a) the number of requests for checks, (b) the income from fees and (c) the expenditure associated with running the Criminal Records Bureau in the first two years of operation; and if he will make a statement. [157172]

Mr. Charles Clarke [holding answer 6 April 2001]: The Criminal Records Bureau will begin to issue Standard and Enhanced Disclosures later in the current financial year. It is anticipated that demand will be at a low level initially, and will build up. Basic disclosures will not begin to be issued before the 2002–03 financial year. Cost and business projections have been based on the following levels of demand during this and the next financial year:

Enhanced disclosures	1,216,751	3,182,690
Standard disclosures	109,526	296,590
Basic disclosures	0	2,786,350

Estimated total revenues, and the estimated total cost of operating the Bureau, during the same two years are as follows:

	2001–02	2002–03
Estimated total revenues	12,655,727	63,430,902
Estimated total cost	48,277,786	80,425,047

On the best information available, we anticipate that, despite the low level of income initially, progressively higher income will enable recovery of the full cost of establishing and operating this new service to be achieved within a period of five years.

Lords-Lieutenant

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many deputy lords-lieutenant are members of political parties, broken down by party. [157716]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: We do not hold this information. The deputy lieutenants of a county or area are appointed by the Lord-Lieutenant. Appointments are not based on political affiliation, but on place of residence and service to the community.

Former New Towns (Police Stations)

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assistance is provided for former new towns with a requirement for new police stations. [157702]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Police resources are allocated between all 43 forces in England and Wales according to a formula that allocates central Government supported funding to provide a standard level of service. The formula is weighted according to population, so that forces with larger populations receive more money. The socio-demographic nature of the population is also taken into account. Decisions relating to the location of police stations are operational matters for the chief constable of the force concerned.

Lay Magistrates

Mr. David Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the role of lay magistrates in reducing average time delays for dealing with persistent young offenders. [157565]

Mr. Charles Clarke: We welcome the valuable contribution that lay magistrates are making to reducing the time from arrest to sentence for persistent young offenders. The overall average has been cut from 142 days in 1996 to 89 days by January this year; and cases sentenced in the magistrates courts averaged 82 days. This represents significant progress thanks to the commitment, hard work and co-operation of all the agencies involved in youth justice.

Police Recruits

Mr. Salter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many new police recruits there were in (a) the Thames Valley Police Force, (b) the Hertfordshire Constabulary, (c) the Essex Police Force, (d) the Kent County Constabulary, (e) the Surrey Police Force, (f) the Hampshire Constabulary, (g) the Sussex Police Force and (h) England and Wales in the period (i) 1 May 1994 to 30 April 1995, (ii) 1 May 1995 to 30 April 1996, (iii) 1 May 1996 to 30 April 1997, (iv) 1 May 1997 to 30 April 1998, (v) 1 May 1998 to 30 April 1999, (vi) 1 May 1999 to 30 April 2000 and (vii) since 1 May 2000. [151120]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Recruitment figures for constable recruits are available from January 1994 to January 2001, and are given in the table.

	Essex	Hampshire	Hertfordshire	Kent	Surrey	Sussex	Thames Valley	England and Wales
January 1994 to March 1995[1]	115	129	91	110	98	116	161	6,386

[1] Before April 1995 information was collated on a calendar year basis. The data cover the transitional 15 month period.
[2] The figures are as now provided in the Home Office Statistical Bulletin on Police Service Strength. Numbers are mainly new recruits, but also include those who have previously been police constables in non-Home Office forces and any who may have previously left and subsequently rejoined the service.

Drug-related Crime

Mr. Pond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what new funding will be made available to tackle drug-related crime. [153893]

Mr. Straw: In addition to the £220 million announced by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer in the Budget, new funding of £50 million will also be made available over the two years, 2002–03 to 2003–04, to accelerate the programme to extend drug testing within the criminal justice system. The initial pilot phase of the programme is due to start in the spring.

Evidence of the effectiveness of these pilots will inform final decisions on where best to spend this new funding within the criminal justice system.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Logos and Branding

Mr. Tyrie: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how much has been spent by his Department on departmental and agency logos and associated branding since 1 May 1997. [152647]

Ms Quin: The amount spent by my Department on logos or associated branding since 1 May 1997 is £25,773. Information relating to agencies is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Animal Disease (Planning)

Mr. Nicholls: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what arrangements his Department makes for conducting emergency planning exercises in relation to the possible outbreak of infectious diseases among animals; if such exercises (a) involve liaising with the (i) police and (ii) the armed forces; and are conducted periodically; by what grade of civil servant such exercises are authorised and supervised; if the type of the diseases concerned is specified to the suppliers in the case of materials to be used in connection with a real outbreak; if he will list the emergency planning exercises that have been conducted in the last two years; and if he will make a statement. [155927]

Ms Quin [holding answer 27 March 2001]: MAFF regularly holds emergency exercises which may involve liaison with the police, but not the armed forces. Such exercises are generally authorised and supervised by the Divisional Veterinary Manager or regionally, by a Veterinary Head of Service.

Animal Health Offices are required regularly to update their local contingency plans. This includes contacting potential suppliers of materials and services to be used in the event of an outbreak. The reason for any such inquiry should be explained fully. Detailed information on emergency exercises held over the last two years is not held centrally and can be collected only at disproportionate cost. However, between 1994 and 1999, MAFF carried out 84 separate exercises aimed at planning to control notifiable animal diseases.

Foot and Mouth

Mr. Stephen O'Brien: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when, and in what locations, (a) the epidemic strain of foot and mouth virus associated with the current outbreak and (b) its close relatives have been recorded in previous outbreaks. [155837]

Ms Quin [holding answer 27 March 2001]: The pandemic serotype O virus (now named the pan-Asian strain) was first isolated in northern India in 1990. Since then it has been found in Saudi Arabia, Turkey, Greece, Bulgaria, Iran, Iraq, Syria, Israel, Lebanon, Jordan and the Arabian peninsula, Nepal Bhutan, the People's Republic of China, Myanmar, Vietnam, Cambodia, Thailand, Malaysia, Laos, Korea, Japan and South Africa.

Mr. Stephen O'Brien: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food in relation to the current foot and mouth epidemic, to what level of discrimination the specific epidemic strain of the Pan-Asia O virus has been identified; and what the strain classification is. [155850]

Ms Quin [holding answer 27 March 2001]: Analysis carried out by the Foot and Mouth Reference Laboratory in Pirbright has identified the strain responsible for the current outbreak as FMD virus serotype O. It was identified as the Pan-Asian using nucleotide sequence data obtained for the complete VP1 gene. The same strain has been responsible for the outbreaks in different parts of Great Britain, and for those in the Netherlands and Northern Ireland.

Mr. Fabricant: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what average time it takes to answer callers to the foot and mouth helplines; and how many callers (a) were disconnected and (b) hung up before their call was answered. [156214]

Ms Quin [holding answer 30 March 2001]: During the period 22 February 2001 to 29 March 2001, 60,979 telephone calls to the foot and mouth disease helpline were answered successfully. The average call answer time was 35 seconds.

During the period 22 February 2001 to 25 March 2001, 2,140 calls were disconnected before entering the queue while 9,051 calls were abandoned while held in the queue.

Mr. Steen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many vets from each EU member state he has employed since the start of the outbreak of foot and mouth. [156536]

Ms Quin [holding answer 2 April 2001]: This Department is receiving assistance from EU veterinarians, who receive travel and subsistence expenses from this Department but are employed by their respective Governments. We are also liaising with other member states and it is likely that veterinarians from these countries will soon join in the eradication of FMD. The following EU member states have already supplied vets.

In addition this Department is in the process of appointing Temporary Veterinary Inspectors (TVIs) from the following EU member states:

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what support he will provide to farmers to manage lambing on split sites. [157393]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 6 April 2001]: Farmers should, first of all, do everything possible to look after their sheep where they are. We have produced advice to help with the welfare issue. If this is not possible, the sheep may be moved under the available welfare movement schemes. Finally, when all other options have been explored, there is the Livestock Welfare (Disposal) Scheme.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will take steps to speed up the process of slaughtering livestock under the animal welfare scheme for farmers in Lancashire. [157163]

Ms Quin [holding answer 6 April 2001]: The scheme has been slow to start due to the need to secure landfill disposal, as all bar one rendering plant is needed for what must be our top priority, the compulsory cull to control disease. We have arranged extra on-farm slaughters for acute welfare cases and will continue to do so, but cases must be prioritised. I can assure my hon. Friend that we are doing everything we can to speed the movement of livestock to slaughter through this scheme, under which we have now slaughtered over 19,500 animals.

Mrs. Gilroy: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food from which organisations he has (a) sought and (b) received advice about animal welfare in respect of the options available to the Government for containing the outbreak of foot and mouth disease. [157224]

Mr. Morley: All the major welfare organisations, including the Farm Animal Welfare Council, have offered us advice on welfare aspects of the foot and mouth disease outbreak. I have also held a meeting, at my request, with representatives of the RSPCA, Compassion in World Farming and the Humane Slaughter Association.

Mr. Fabricant: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make arrangements for local veterinary inspectors' expenses arising from the welfare movement and welfare disposal schemes to be paid direct by his Department. [156921]

Mr. Morley: The expenses of LVIs undertaking inspections under the livestock welfare (disposal) scheme are met by the Department. The welfare movement schemes are supported by declarations given by the applicant's private veterinary surgeon.

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the consequential losses made by businesses in Gloucestershire due to (a) foot and mouth disease and (b) the cancelling of the Cheltenham Festival; and if he will make a statement. [154310]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 19 March 2001]: The taskforce chaired by my right hon. Friend the Minister for the Environment is considering the economic impact of foot and mouth disease generally, and the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions is collecting information from all parts of the country. We are aware that the cancellation of the Cheltenham Festival and other sporting events is having very serious consequences for many businesses. The measures announced by my right hon. Friend the Minister for the Environment on 20 March are designed to alleviate these effects.

Mr. Gill: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what response he made to the letter from Mr. Lawrence of Ciel Logistics in May 2000 concerning the health risks associated with consignments of bush meat arriving at Heathrow from Africa. [155560]

Ms Quin [holding answer 26 March 2001]: None; the letter was passed to Her Majesty's Customs and Excise for reply. I replied on 28 March to a letter sent to me on 11 March 2001 by Mr. Lawrence.

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what discussions he has had with Commissioner Byrne and Commissioner Fischler on animal health, in particular the risk from imports from countries with infected animals; [156278]

(2) when he will reply to the question tabled by the hon. Member for Vale of York on 27 March relating to discussions with European Commissioners about animal health (ref: 156278). [157365]

Ms Quin [holding answers 2 April 2001 and 6 April 2001]: My right hon. Friend the Minister has spoken and written to both Commissioners Byrne and Fischler. In addition, the European Commission's Standing Veterinary Committee meets regularly to discuss all animal health matters, including the risk of importing disease from infected animals.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Departmental Policies (Amber Valley)

Judy Mallaber: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will set out, with statistical information relating as directly as possible to the Amber Valley constituency, the effects on Amber Valley of his Department's policies and actions since 2 May 1997. [157134]

Mr. Rooker: The Department's policies and initiatives have made a significant contribution to the Government's overall objectives of: eradicating child poverty in 20 years, and halving it within 10; promoting work as the best form of welfare for people of working age while protecting the position of those in greatest need; and, combating poverty and promoting security and independence in retirement for today's and tomorrow's pensioners.

These goals are being pursued nationwide and our achievements are set out in our annual "Opportunity for all" reports. Our second report, "Opportunity for all—One year on: making a difference" (CM4865, September 2000) sets out what progress has been made in the past year, as well as highlighting what more needs to be done. Nationwide statistical information is necessarily more complete than data at a local authority level, but the following provides a comparative guide to the effect of the Department's policies and actions in Amber Valley since May 1997.

Measures in our five Budgets so far will lift over 1.2 million children nationally out of poverty. These include record increases to Child Benefit, the introduction of the Working Families Tax Credit, increases in the income-related benefits, the minimum wage and tax changes.

Child Benefit will be worth £15.50 a week for the eldest child and £10.35 a week for other children from April 2001: nationally about 7 million families receive Child Benefit, and in Amber Valley 11,193 families benefit.

We now have the lowest unemployment rate in 25 years. The New Deals have helped lone parents, the young unemployed, the long-term unemployed, the over-50s and partners of the unemployed to move from benefit into work. In the period since May 1997 the number of people claiming Jobseeker's Allowance nationally has reduced from 1,562,400 to 960,600; in Amber Valley the number has reduced from 1,900 to 1,600. Since May 1997 the number of lone parents who claim Income Support has decreased from 1,013,500 to 894,100 nationally; in Amber Valley the number has increased from 900 to 1,000.

Older people are disproportionately affected by fuel poverty. So we have introduced Winter Fuel Payments to help with their heaviest fuel bill. This winter, the payment is £200 for households who qualify. Around 18,600 older people in Amber Valley have received a Winter Fuel Payment for this winter (2000–01).

To demonstrate our commitment to combating pensioner poverty, this year we will spend £4.5 billion extra in real terms on pensioners. Some 17,100 pensioners in Amber Valley will benefit from the substantial increases in the basic state pension this April and next; this year's increase is £5 a week for single pensioners and £8 for couples. In addition we have introduced free TV licences for the over-75s of whom we estimate there are about 7,600 in Amber Valley. 2,500 pensioner families in Amber Valley are receiving the Minimum Income Guarantee, which we introduced in April 1999 to help our poorest pensioners. From April they will be at least £15 a week, or £800 a year, better off in real terms as a result of Government measures since 1997.

Other reforms in the pipeline include: the new Pension Credit in 2003 designed to ensure that pensioners benefit from their savings; the launch of Stakeholder Pensions in April this year; and the introduction of the State Second Pension in April 2002 both of which will help provide greater security for tomorrow's pensioners.

Departmental Policies (Eccles)

Mr. Ian Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will set out, including statistical information relating as directly as possible to the Eccles constituency, the effects on Eccles of his Department's policies and actions since 2 May 1997. [157289]

Mr. Rooker: The Department's policies and initiatives have made a significant contribution to the Government's overall objectives of: eradicating child poverty in 20 years, and halving it within 10; promoting work as the best form of welfare for people of working age while protecting the position of those in greatest need; and combating poverty and promoting security and independence in retirement for today's and tomorrow's pensioners.

Departmental Expenditure (Scotland)

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what has been the annual expenditure on office equipment for his Department in Scotland in the (a) 1998–99, (b) 1999–2000 and (c) 2000–01 financial years; and what the planned expenditure for 2001–02 is; [155090]

(2) what has been the annual expenditure on (a) fixtures and fittings and (b) general office expenses for his Department in Scotland for the (i) 1998–99, (ii) 1999–2000 and (iii) 2000–01 financial years; and what the planned expenditure for 2001–02 is. [155092]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 23 March 2001]: The information on expenditure by the Department on office equipment, fixtures and fittings and general office expenses in Scotland is not collected centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what has been the annual expenditure of his Department in Scotland on (a) buildings and (b) insurance of buildings and staff in the (i) 1998–99, (ii) 1999–2000 and (iii) 2000–01 financial years and what the planned expenditure for 2001–02 is. [155091]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 23 March 2001]: The information is in the table. It covers only those activities of the Department located in Scotland. Many services provided by the Department to residents in Scotland are located elsewhere.

Regarding insurance for buildings and staff I refer the hon. Member to the written answer I gave the hon. Member on 21 March 2001, Official Report, column 265W.

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what has been the annual expenditure on vehicles for his Department in Scotland in the (a) 1998–99, (b) 1999–2000 and (c) 2000–01 financial years; and what the planned expenditure for 2001–02 is. [155089]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 23 March 2001]: The information is not available in the format requested.

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what has been the annual expenditure on training and development for his Department in Scotland for the (a) 1999–2000 and (b) 2000–01 financial years; and what the planned expenditure for 2001–02 is. [155088]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 23 March 2001]: The annual expenditure on training and development for the Department in Scotland for 1999–2000 was £6,719,482; for 2000–01 was £5,676,701; planned expenditure for 2001–02 will be known mid-April 2001. This expenditure supports the Department's work not only in Scotland but also elsewhere in the UK. Similarly, training undertaken elsewhere in the UK benefits the Department's work in Scotland.

Benefits Statistics

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much has been paid in (a) state retirement benefits to pensioners and (b) in Child Benefit to parents residing in each parliamentary constituency in the United Kingdom in each of the past five years. [157395]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 6 April 2001]: Information on annual benefit spending by parliamentary constituency is not available. For 1999–2000 and 2000–01, information is available from a point-in-time scan of administrative data which show numbers of recipients and average amounts of Retirement Pension received by constituency. Similarly, information on numbers of first and subsequent children in each constituency is available for 1999–2000 and 2000–01 from a point-in-time scan. This information has been placed in the Library.

As the information is for a certain point-in-time in each year, any calculation based on the numbers and average amounts would not correspond to the actual annual expenditure in that constituency. Nor would a total so derived match the total spending on the benefits shown in the accounts.

Foot and Mouth (Benefits)

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many additional benefit claims are expected as a result of the effects of foot and mouth disease, broken down into (a) Jobseeker's Allowance, (b) Housing Benefit, (c) Council Tax Benefit and (d) other benefits; and what extra support is being offered to the Benefits Agency and local authorities to ensure that these claims are processed quickly. [157078]

Angela Eagle: It is not possible to estimate with any degree of accuracy the number of claims to benefit that will result from the outbreak of foot and mouth disease.

Details of the robust measures being taken to ensure that claims to benefit from people affected by the outbreak of foot and mouth disease are dealt with quickly and sensitively were set out by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State in his reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Doncaster, Central (Ms Winterton) on 30 March 2001, Official Report, column 794W.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Simon Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what assessment he has made of the effect of the repeal of Regulation 100 under the Child Support, Pensions and Social Security Act 2000 on the ability of local authorities to seek recovery of overpayment of Housing Benefit. [156339]

Angela Eagle: Regulation 100 of the Housing Benefit (General) Regulations was revoked to simplify the procedure for local authorities to recover Housing Benefit overpayments. The regulation duplicated the primary power set out in section 75(1) of the Social Security Administration Act 1992 and had caused some administrative confusion.

The revocation did not alter the powers of local authorities to seek recovery of a Housing Benefit overpayment once it had been decided that the overpayment was recoverable.

Mr. Simon Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what the procedure is for appealing against the decision of a rent officer regarding the amount of Housing Benefit to be paid to an individual. [156340]

Angela Eagle: Rent Officers do not decide the amount of Housing Benefit payable to a person. The amount of Housing Benefit to be paid is determined by the relevant local authority after they have considered the claim under the Housing Benefit (General) Regulations. If a person disagrees with their award they may appeal against this decision.

Where the Housing Benefit award against which an appeal is made is based on the level of rent set by a Rent Officer, or if the local authority believes the Rent Officer's decision may be erroneous, the local authority has the power to arrange for the Rent Service to revisit the decision. This action is carried out by a Rent Officer other than the one who made the original decision, and normally one from a different rent registration area.

Single Room Rent

Mr. Lepper: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 23 March 2001, Official Report, column 370W on single room rent, what representations he has received concerning the impact of the single room rent in Brighton and Hove; what assessment he has undertaken of the likely impact of the proposed new young person's rent regulations in Brighton and Hove; and what consideration was given in drafting the proposed new young person's rent regulations to the submission sent to him by the hon. Member for Brighton, Pavillion on behalf of various agencies in Brighton and Hove. [156647]

Angela Eagle: I am aware of my hon. Friend's representations on behalf of Brighton and Hove to the effect that the current rules were too restrictive and that they should be eased. We gave full consideration to these representations as we did to others. The new rules from July this year are therefore designed to reflect better what the market generally has to offer on a national basis. Moreover, local authorities will have the discretion to provide additional support in individual cases under the new arrangements for Discretionary Housing Payments, which will also apply from July. We are considering how best to monitor their operation.

Our objectives for the single room rent are to ensure that young people have access to accommodation so that they can concentrate on finding work, balanced against our aim of making sure that the benefit system does not provide out of work young adults with better housing than their working peers could afford. We made these objectives clear, including the option of broadening the definition of the single room rent, in our Housing Green Paper "Quality and Choice: A decent home for all" on which we consulted widely.

Ms Buck: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 23 March 2001, Official Report, column 370W, how many organisations commented in response to the proposals in the Government's Housing Green Paper, "Quality and Choice: A decent home for all", on the single room rent; how many of these responses (a) supported abolition, (b) favoured abolition in preference to a broadening of the definition, (c) supported broadening the definition and (d) supported no change to the current definition; and if he will place these responses in the Library. [156714]

Angela Eagle: Two hundred and five respondents commented on the proposals to broaden the single room rent (SRR) set out in the Housing Green Paper. Information on the views of the respondents is not available in the format requested. However, a detailed analysis of all responses to the Housing Green Paper proposals was carried out by independent consultants. This analysis is available on the internet at www.housing.detr.gov.uk/information/consult/responses/analysis/index.htm and a copy has been placed in the Library.

Winter Fuel Payments

Mr. Simon Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what representations he has received concerning the late payment of back-dated winter fuel allowance. [156342]

Mr. Rooker: There have been a number of representations from hon. Members and the public. Statistics on these representations are not available.

Our intention has always been to make payments for past winters as soon as practically possible. The first payments were issued in the week commencing 19 June last year, just two months after the claims process was up and running.

Claims for past winters are not subject to any time limits. As it is up to the individual to choose whether and when to claim, we are still receiving and processing new claims.

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the cost of the advertising campaign to inform men aged 60–64 of their eligibility for backdated Winter Fuel Payments. [157051]

Mr. Rooker: The information is not available in the format requested. The total cost of the overall communication campaign for Winter Fuel Payments which ran from April 2000 was £1.1 million. The campaign, which featured national and regional press advertising, information leaflets and posters in outlets such as post offices, supermarkets and libraries, included messages for those seeking retrospective Winter Fuel Payments alongside information for people who get their payments automatically and for those who have to claim.

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to continue with the advertising campaign informing men aged 60–64 of their eligibility for backdated Winter Fuel Payments. [157052]

Mr. Rooker: The communications strategy for delivery of Winter Fuel Payments for 2001 is currently being developed.

Home Visits (Benefit Claims)

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what information he collects on the number of home visits made by local authority employees in connection with social security claims. [156532]

Angela Eagle [holding answer 2 April 2001]: Housing Benefit and Council Tax Benefit statistical returns collected by the Department include information about the number of home visits successfully made by local authority benefit fraud officers.

Minimum Income Guarantee

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many pensioners he expects to be eligible for the Minimum Income Guarantee following the introduction of the new capital limits; and what plans he has to contact them. [156978]

Mr. Rooker: In March, some 102,000 pensioners were written to with information on the Minimum Income Guarantee (MIG) and invited to make a claim. These consisted of pensioners who were part of the original take-up campaign but were not entitled due to excess income or capital and those pensioners who had been excluded from the original mailings because they held capital over £8,000. Some 140,000 pensioners will newly benefit as a result of this month's increase to the MIG rates and capital limits.

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much he expects to pay to organisations who have provided information under the terms of the Social Security Fraud Bill in the first year after the Bill is enacted. [157083]

The exact amount paid to the information providers will depend upon detailed negotiations after the Bill has received Royal Assent.

"Closed schemes" are schemes that admit no new members but allow existing members to continue to contribute.
3. In addition there are 83 schemes that are no longer required to pay the Registry levy. These include schemes that have merged or wound up.

Stakeholder Pensions

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what the Government's estimate is of the fines likely to be imposed on employers who fail to offer access to a stakeholder pension; and what leeway will be offered to employers in the first year of the scheme. [157071]

Mr. Rooker: The Occupational Pensions Regulatory Authority (Opra) will have the power to impose fines, under the Pensions Act 1995, on an organisation for failure to provide employer access to a stakeholder pension. The level of any fine will depend upon the circumstances surrounding a breach, including how the employer has responded on being contacted about the breach.

Departmental Advertising

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security on what basis he calculated the figures for the costs of his Department's advertising campaigns in (a) his answer of 7 March 2001, Official Report, column 233W, (b) his answer of 19 March 2001, Official Report, column 75W and (c) the most recent departmental annual report. [157106]

Mr. Rooker: The figures given in my answer on 19 March 2001, Official Report, column 75W, were for all estimated advertising related expenditure for current campaigns. These cover advertising and other marketing activity eg. leaflets, research, direct mail, etc.

Figures given in my answer on 7 March 2001, Official Report, column 233W, were estimated for spend solely on advertising to be consistent with figures given for previous years as requested in the question.

WALES

Foot and Mouth

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what discussions (a) he and (b) staff in his Department had with officials of the National Assembly concerning possible outbreaks of foot and mouth disease, prior to 19 February; and if he will make a statement. [154825]

Mr. Paul Murphy: I regularly meet the First Secretary to discuss a range of issues affecting Wales, including agricultural matters. My officials and officials within the Assembly are also in frequent contact about agricultural issues.

However, prior to the 19 February, these discussions did not include the possible outbreak of foot and mouth disease.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what additional resources are being made available to the National Assembly for Wales to help agricultural and tourism-related businesses to survive the financial effects of the consequences of foot and mouth disease. [154840]

Mr. Paul Murphy: The Assembly is involved in the decisions being made on assistance for rural businesses affected by the consequences of foot and mouth disease. Any additional funding for the Assembly would be provided under the funding arrangements for the devolved Administrations, which were set out in the Statement of Funding Policy in July 2000.

GM Crops

Mr. Simon Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales on what date he received notification from the Department of the Environment, Transport and Regions of its recent decision to license GM crop sites in Wales; and if he will make a statement. [157986]

Mr. Paul Murphy: I was aware, as were Assembly Ministers and officials, that sites across the UK were being sought for the second year of the Farm Scale Evaluations programme.

The decision on locations for the trials was taken by the Scientific Steering Committee for the programme, on the basis of advice from the Research Consortium and information about the availability of sites from the Supply Chain Initiative on Modified Agricultural Crops (SCIMAC).

DETR officials informed relevant officials about the three GM maize sites proposed for Wales once they had themselves been notified of the exact locations by SCIMAC. DETR then announced the sites on Tuesday 3 April and wrote to county and community councils in Wales with proposed sites in their areas to provide information about the Farm Scale Evaluation programme.

Any further information on the detail of the announcement would be a matter for the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions.

SOLICITOR-GENERAL

Jay Abatan

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Solicitor-General if he will review the decisions taken by the Crown Prosecution Service following the fatal attack on Jay Abatan in Brighton in January 1999, following the findings of the review by Essex police into the handling of the case in Sussex. [157143]

The Solicitor-General: The aim of review by the Essex police into the fatal attack on Jay Abatan was to examine the conduct of the investigation by Sussex police officers. The review was commissioned by the Sussex police. The Crown Prosecution Service in Sussex has not yet received a copy of the review but remain willing to consider any findings relating to the way the CPS dealt with the prosecution of the case.

I explained in a detailed written answer on 24 May 2000, Official Report, columns 528–31W, when responding to a question put down by the hon. Member, that the decisions made by the Sussex Crown Prosecution Service were entirely satisfactory, given the evidence produced by the initial police investigation. I am willing to reconsider that conclusion in the light of any findings of the review.

Sussex police have appointed a new investigation team. Consistent with this fresh start, the Chief Crown Prosecutor for CPS Sussex made arrangements for a senior lawyer from Hampshire Crown Prosecution Service to deal with any prosecution which may result from the new investigation.

The Leeds Initiative SRB Round 1 scheme: Removing barriers—creating opportunities

The programme consists of a package of employment and job creation measures designed to reduce unemployment and crime in inner city areas. The scheme is focused on four Community Priority Areas (CPAs):

East Leeds CPA

North Leeds CPA

West Leeds CPA

South Leeds CPA.

Lifetime total SRB funding is £16.48 million which is expected to lever in an additional investment of £26.5 million from other public and private sector sources over a seven year period commencing 1995–96.

The Leeds Initiative SRB Round 2 scheme: Rebuilding our communities

The programme aims to build on Round 1 activities by investing in physical regeneration in the East Bank area of Richmond Hill and by capitalising on training, employment and business growth opportunities in the East Bank and Chapeltown/Harehills, Hyde Park/Burley and Beeston Urban Renewal Areas. The scheme is primarily housing led and aims to stimulate local business and employment growth through major housing investment programmes.

The scheme has attracted a lifetime total SRB funding of £12.5 million which is expected to lever in an additional investment of £55.7 million from other public and private sector sources over a seven year period commencing 1996–97.

Community action and support against crime—SRB Round 2 scheme

A three year scheme commenced 1996–97 and targeted on the Chapeltown and Harehills area of Leeds. The scheme provided a local focus for tackling high crime rates by strengthening community resolve to fight crime and overcome the fear of crime. It mixed target hardening and property marking with increased community participation in Neighbourhood Watch, enhanced victim support services, diversionary activities for youth and drugs counselling. The SRB contribution totalled £200,000.

The Leeds Initiative SRB Round 3 scheme: Leeds partnership with young people

The scheme proposes to tackle deprivation by providing assistance to young people aged nine to 25 living in the four most deprived electoral wards in the city: Burmantofts, Chapel Allerton, Harehills and the University.

The lifetime total SRB funding is £23.9 million which is expected to lever in an additional investment of £49.1 million from other public and private sector sources over a seven year period commencing 1997–98.

The Leeds Initiative SRB Round 4 scheme: Investing in the community

This scheme is targeted at the communities of Beeston Hill and Holbeck. The overall objective is to develop a sustainable regeneration strategy for the target area that will provide the local communities with an improvement to the quality of their lives.

The scheme has attracted a lifetime total SRB funding of £7.4 million which is expected to lever in an additional investment of £16 million from other public and private sector sources over a seven year period commencing 1998–99.

The Leeds Initiative SRB Round 5 scheme: Better neighbourhoods and confident communities

A seven year scheme, commencing 1999–2000, targeted at the most socially excluded neighbourhoods in Leeds. Its focus cuts across the range of SRB Objectives and seeks to address issues of neighbourhood decline in the following four main areas of concern:

Community Involvement

Neighbourhood Management

Community Safety

Improving Opportunities.

The overall lifetime funding package totals £61.164 million, of which the SRB contribution is £24.864 million.

The Leeds Initiative SRB Round 6 scheme: Aire Valley employment area

The overall objective of this seven year scheme, commencing 2000–01, is to transform the area, which forms the region's largest industrial site, into a high quality, sustainable employment base for the people of Leeds (particularly deprived communities in the east and south of the city) and the Yorkshire and Humberside region as a whole.

The overall lifetime funding package totals £46.4 million, of which the SRB contribution is £11.6 million.

European Funding

Leeds was not eligible for Objective 2 funding under the 1997–99 programme. However, it was eligible for support under the KONVER Community Initiative (to support diversification of economic activities in areas dependent on the defence sector). Projects in the area received offers of support totalling nearly £860,000 via ERDF measures and £234,000 via ESF.

The Chapeltown/Harehills area was also eligible for support under the URBAN Community Initiative (to support the development of urban areas in crisis). Projects in the area received offers totalling some £2.2 million via ERDF measures and £300,000 via ESF. The initiative was actually managed by a Board/Committee made up of local authority and local community representatives.

For Objective 3 (ESF), Leeds had £2.86 million in 1997, £4.1 million in 1998 and £8 million in 1999–2000.

For Objective 4 (ESF), it had £105,000 in 1998 and £1.5 million in 1999.

Packaging Waste (Pots)

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if plastic plant pots are considered to be packaging for the purposes of the Producer Responsibility Obligation (Packaging Waste) Regulations 1997. [157603]

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: A recent High Court ruling confirmed the interpretation of the Producer Responsibility Obligations (Packaging Waste) Regulations 1997 (as amended) that has been taken since the Regulations came into force in 1997. Where an empty plant pot is brought as a retail product, it is not packaging. Where a plant is bought in a pot and will be kept in the pot throughout its life, or where a pot is made of biodegradable material and will be planted in the garden with the plant, the pot is not regarded as packaging. However, where plants are bought in a plant pot or a seed or bedding tray and will be transplanted to the garden, such pots are packaging. This is because these pots are used to keep the plants in good condition throughout the sales process until replanting and contain the plants for the ease and convenience of the purchaser in handling and transporting them. As such, each pot constitutes a 'sales' unit at the time of purchase.

Transport Council

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what the outcome was of the Transport Council held in Brussels on 4 and 5 April; what the Government's voting record was at the Council; and if he will make a statement. [157537]

Mr. Hill: I represented the United Kingdom at the Council, which was held in Luxembourg.

The Council opened with a policy debate on the Commission's second package of maritime safety issues. The Presidency presented a questionnaire focusing on the three elements in the package: improved ship monitoring, an additional compensation fund mechanism in cases of oil pollution, and the creation of a European Maritime Safety Agency (EMSA). The Commission hoped for common positions at the June Council. I stressed the importance of considering these proposals in the context of the International Maritime Organisation (IMO) and of existing member state competence, an approach shared by most member states present.

On Galileo, the Council adopted an approach that established milestones for future significant decisions about the launch of the development (December 2001) and the deployment (December 2003) phases. I was one of a number of Ministers to speak in support of this approach, which is intended to ensure that the project is based on sound financial management and private sector financing, as required by successive conclusions of the European Council. The decision milestones are necessary if Galileo is to deliver tangible benefits to the public and provide the taxpayer with good value for money. I also argued for more work to be carried out this year to meet UK and other member states' concerns about costs, management arrangements, the definition of the services and attracting private finance. This work will help the Council make an informed decision in December about the future of the project.

The Council agreed a Resolution setting out priorities for further progress in integrating environmental issues into transport policy. The Commission said it would follow up many of these priorities in the forthcoming Common Transport Policy White Paper.

There was a progress report and policy debate on the draft regulation establishing a European Aviation Safety Agency (EASA). The Presidency sought views on the key issues of which aircraft should be covered, the mechanism for appointment of the Executive Director, and inspections of member states and investigations of undertakings. I joined others in expressing the views that only member state registered aircraft should be covered, that the Executive Director should be appointed by the Agency's Administrative Board, and that EASA should have the powers of inspection and investigation. The Presidency concluded that discussion should continue in the Working Group, aiming for a common position as soon as practicable.

The Council agreed Conclusions urging member states to be in a position to ratify the Montreal Convention on air carrier liability by 31 December 2002. The Council also agreed a Decision for Community ratification of the Convention, to be deposited simultaneously with those of the member states. The Presidency hoped that a decision on a revision of Regulation 2027/97 would be taken in June.

The Commissioner reported on her recent visit to the United States to discuss ways to limit aircraft noise in future. She felt the exchange had been useful and further technical meetings had since been arranged.

The Commissioner also initiated a discussion on the state of the European airline industry, arguing that a Community mandate to negotiate with the US was a necessary precursor of airline consolidation.

The Presidency presented a framework for the Community to negotiate on aviation environmental issues, particularly aircraft noise, in the run-up to the International Civil Aviation Organisation (ICAO) General Assembly in September. This framework was agreed unanimously.

Pending the First Reading of the European Parliament there was political agreement on the text of a Regulation requiring third country lorry drivers to carry a certificate of legal employment. The UK maintained a parliamentary scrutiny reserve.

Following a Commission presentation, the Presidency confirmed that the directive on professional driver training would be discussed at the June Council.

The Council debated a proposed amendment to the directive on weights and dimensions of heavy vehicles, requiring member states to accept the use of 15 metre buses. The Presidency presented a global compromise addressing delegations' outstanding concerns. At the end of the debate, the Presidency concluded that there was general political agreement, but that the text of a derogation for the UK (addressing our concerns at the out-swing of these vehicles) would be remitted to Coreper for further consideration.

The Council adopted Conclusions on the Commission's recent Recommendation on the maximum permitted blood alcohol level for drivers. The Conclusions underline the importance of progress on a range of drink drive measures including collaboration between member states.

The Council discussed a proposed amendment to the directive on compulsory use of safety belts and child restraint systems. The text under discussion attempted to solve outstanding concerns on the detailed requirements for young children to use adult seat belts in the absence of appropriate child restraints. A number of member states had concerns about the proposals. The UK was among those taking the view that it required further examination. The Presidency concluded that the Council could not reach agreement and remitted the text for further consideration at the technical level, hoping for a common position in June.

There was a progress report and policy debate on new proposals to update the procurement procedures for public transport services. The Commission hoped that the new regulations would be discussed in June.

There was a discussion over lunch of the draft directive on the harmonisation of weekend lorry bans. The Commission emphasised the importance of harmonising the periods during which member states may impose bans and stressed that the proposal applied only to new bans and to the transport Trans-European Network. Consultation would be required on the imposition of new bans. I joined a number of member states in supporting the proposal.

The Commission noted the success of the Ecopoints system in managing lorry transits through Austria. It would be maintained only until 2003. The Commission undertook to issue a report soon about operation of the system.

No formal votes were taken at this Council.

Energy Efficiency Savings

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the time scale for achieving the 30 per cent. energy efficiency savings laid down in the House Energy Conservation Act 1995. [157539]

Mr. Meacher: The Home Energy Conservation Act 1995 requires designated energy conservation authorities to prepare a report setting out energy conservation measures that the authority considers practicable, cost-effective and likely to result in significant improvement in the energy efficiency of residential accommodation in its area.

In England, the Secretary of State for the Environment asked energy conservation authorities to prepare a strategy for making at least substantial progress towards a 30 per cent. improvement in energy efficiency over a 10-year period commencing 1 April 1996. Strategies were not expected to exceed 15 years. Similar arrangements apply in the devolved Administrations.

I have placed in the Library information on improvements reported by each local authority in England from 1 April 1996 to 21 March 2000 (the latest data available).

M27

Sandra Gidley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when resurfacing of junctions 2 to 4 of the M27 motorway will commence; and if he will make a statement. [157966]

Mr. Hill: Resurfacing of the M27 between junctions 2 and 4 is programmed to start in late autumn 2001, subject to funds being available.

Bus Services

Mr. Grogan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many bus services were operated from Tadcaster (a) in May 1997 and (b) on the most recent date for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement. [157961]

Mr. Hill: The total number of bus departures from Tadcaster bus station on an average weekday were 85 in May 1997 and 100 in April 2001.

Mr. Grogan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many buses were operated from Selby (a) in May 1997 and (b) on the most recent date for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement. [157960]

Mr. Hill: The total number of bus departures from Selby bus station on an average weekday were 190 in May 1997 and 214 in April 2001.

Pilots' Licences

Mr. Gerald Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to amend the Air Navigation Order to give effect to a national private pilot's licence; when he hopes to amend the ANO; and if he will permit flying hours undertaken by student pilots from 1 May to count towards the issue of an NPPL. [157962]

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: The Civil Aviation Authority advises that detailed negotiations with industry representatives over proposals for a national private pilots licence are moving towards a satisfactory conclusion. Once agreement has been reached, there will follow the normal period of consultation and, subject to general agreement on the proposals, it is hoped to amend the ANO in order to give effect to a NPPL from the beginning of next year.

As regards previously accumulated flying hours, the NPPL is envisaged as being a "stand alone" licence, with no read across or equivalence to the Joint Aviation Requirements—Private Pilot's Licence. It will, in effect, exist in isolation of other ICAO compliant licences. Therefore, training to the NPPL syllabus will not be permitted prior to its coming into effect, and no credit will be granted for flying hours acquired under other training syllabuses.

Railtrack

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how much Government funding has been provided to Railtrack through other bodies in each year since 1997. [157752]

Mr. Hill: My answer dated 18 December 2000, Official Report, column 7W, provided details of Government funding to train operating companies (TOCs) in 1997–98, 1998–99 and 1999–2000. In addition, the Government paid freight grants of £21 million, £19 million and £17 million respectively to freight operating companies (FOCs) in those years. That funding is not hypothecated to cover particular types of expenditure, so it cannot be directly identified as the source of payments made by TOCs and FOCs to Railtrack. For example, in addition to Government funding, TOCs receive income from Passenger Transport Executives, from fares paid for passenger services and from payments made for other services.

The table provides details, for 1997–98, 1998–99 and 1999–2000, of access charges paid to Railtrack by TOCs and FOCs, as stated in Railtrack's Annual Reports and Accounts 1998–99 and 1999–2000.

Access charges paid to Railtrack by Tocs and Focs

£ million cash prices

	1997–98	1998–99	1999–2000
Passenger access charges paid by TOCs	2,149	2,169	2,175
Freight access charges paid by FOCs	164	169	158
Railtrack's passenger and freight income	2,313	2,338	2,333

Note:

Railtrack's passenger and freight income makes up some 90 per cent. of its total income. The company's profitability is therefore contingent on Government funding.

London Underground

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many fires there have been on London Underground property in each of (a) the last 10 years (b) the past 12 months. [157473]

Mr. Hill [holding answer 9 April 2001]: London Underground have provided the following figures for fires on their property in recent years and by month in 2000–01.

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many services on the London Underground have been delayed for more than 30 minutes due to train or passenger accidents in each of (a) the last 10 years and (b) the past 12 months. [157471]

Mr. Hill [holding answer 9 April 2001]: This is an operational matter for London Underground Ltd. (LUL) who have provided the following information on delays to train services of 30 minutes and over as a result of train or passenger accidents, for recent years and in the last 12 months.

Channel Tunnel Rail Link

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what the projected cost is of the revised Channel Tunnel Rail Link II; how much of this will be (a) public and (b) private finance; how many extra train paths per hour it is estimated will be provided (i) between St. Pancras-Kings Cross and Fawkham Junction and (ii) between Fawkham Junction and the Channel Tunnel; when it is expected that tunnelling for CTRL II will be completed; and when work on the remodelled St. Pancras-Kings Cross International station will be completed. [157463]

Mr. Hill [holding answer 9 April 2001]: Following the collapse of the original 1996 agreement with London and Continental Railways and the re-structuring of the deal in 1998, the total cost of the Channel Tunnel Rail Link is expected to be £5 2 billion in outturn (ie nominal) prices. Section 1 is expected to cost £1.9 billion and Section 2 £3.3 billion.

Government will provide grants of £2.3 billion for the construction of Section 2. Thus up to the completion of construction £2.3 billion of funding will be public and £1 billion private sector. Government will also receive land rental payments from leasing the land on which the CTRL is built to the Concession holder.

When complete the full length of the CTRL will allow for up to six Eurostar paths per hour, eight paths reserved for the Domestic Operator, two Open Access paths and paths for high speed freight.

The current Section 2 programme shows tunnelling to be completed in June 2005 and work at St. Pancras in March 2006. The Section 2 of the CTRL is expected to open and services to start running in 2007.

Foot and Mouth

Mr. Cash: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will place Stafford borough council and Newcastle-under-Lyme borough council on the list of those areas in receipt of business rate relief in respect of foot and mouth disease. [157613]

Mr. Meacher: Stafford borough council and Newcastle-under-Lyme borough council are not authorities which meet the criteria or rurality used for the targeting of this scheme. However, I have agreed to keep the operation of the scheme under review.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the rural local authorities to which the emergency business rate relief scheme is applicable due to the outbreak of foot and mouth disease. [157497]

Mr. Meacher [holding answer 9 April 2001]: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Mid-Worcestershire (Mr. Luff) on 26 March 2001, Official Report, columns 425–26W.

Mr. Burgon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what steps he is taking to ensure there is adequate landfill capacity to dispose of animal carcases from the foot and mouth disease outbreak; and if he will make a statement. [158295]

Mr. Meacher: I issued yesterday the Waste (Foot and Mouth Disease) (England) Regulations 2001 for statutory consultation with appropriate bodies and a copy was placed in the Library of the House.

The main purpose of the proposed Regulations is to enable the Secretary of State to issue directions requiring the holders of waste management licences for specified landfill sites to accept and dispose of specified kinds of agricultural waste. These Regulations and the consequential directions are necessary to ensure that waste arising from the foot and mouth disease outbreak is disposed of effectively and in ways which ensure protection for the environment and human health.

Recycling

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many projects in Coventry, funded by his Department, are designed to improve levels of recycling. [157860]

Mr. Meacher: The provision of recycling facilities is the responsibility of local authorities and in this case Coventry city council. Major extra funding for local authorities was announced in the Spending Review 2000. By 2003–04 revenue support will have risen by £1.1 billion over 2000–01 provision, in the Environmental Protection and Cultural Services allocation, which includes waste. There will also be a £140 million ring fenced fund for waste and recycling, and £220 million for PFI waste schemes over the next three years.

Coventry may also benefit from projects over wider areas, but I am not aware of any projects funded by DETR which are specific to supporting recycling in Coventry.

Kyoto Agreement

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what progress is being made to reduce carbon dioxide emissions in accordance with the Kyoto Protocol. [157859]

Mr. Meacher: Under the Kyoto Protocol, the UK has agreed to reduce its greenhouse gas emissions by 12.5 per cent. relative to the 1990 level over the period 2008–12. The Government have recently published figures which show that in 1999 the UK's greenhouse gas emissions were 14.5 per cent. below 1990 levels. This represents a 6.5 per cent. reduction between 1998 and 1999.

The Government have also published provisional estimates of carbon dioxide emissions in 2000. These show that emissions were 7.5 per cent. below 1990 levels in 2000, consistent with the general downward trend in emissions shown in the UK Climate Change Programme. However, emissions increased by about 2 per cent. between 1999 and 2000, mainly as a result of increased use of coal in power stations because of maintenance and repair at nuclear and Combined Cycle Gas Turbine power stations and higher gas prices towards the end of the year.

The UK Climate Change Programme, published in November 2000, sets out a range of policies and measures that could reduce the UK's greenhouse gas emissions to 23 per cent. below 1990 levels in 2010, significantly beyond the UK's target under the Kyoto Protocol.

Housing Costs

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many organisations indicated their views on the exclusion of elements of housing costs from the calculation of household income used to define fuel poverty (a) by making submissions to the consultation on the new HEES scheme and (b) by appending their names to other submissions; and how many organisations supported (i) the exclusion of housing costs, (ii) the inclusion of housing costs, (iii) other suggestions and (iv) making no comment. [158003]

Mr. Meacher: The consultation document on the New Home Energy Efficiency Scheme invited comment on whether the calculation of household income should exclude any element of housing costs such as rent or mortgage payments.

A total of 252 responses to the consultation document were received. Some organisations submitted both an individual response as well as appending their names to a response from an umbrella organisation in the area.

The breakdown of responses is as follows:

(i) 20 per cent. of respondents supported the exclusion of some or all housing costs in the calculation of household income;

(ii) 34 per cent. of respondents supported the inclusion of housing costs in the calculation of household income;

(iii) 6 per cent. of respondents offered other suggestions;

(iv) 40 per cent. of respondents made no comment.

A copy of the full analysis of the consultation responses was placed in the House of Commons Library in November 1999.

The consultation draft of the UK Fuel Poverty Strategy shows the number of fuel poor both on the basis of making no allowance for housing costs in the calculation of household income, and by excluding any Housing Benefit or Income Support for Mortgage Interest (ISMI) payments. Comments are invited on the draft strategy by 31 May 2001.

Rural Taskforce

Mr. Green: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many businesses in rural areas have applied for rate relief under the terms of the Rural Taskforce package announced on 20 March. [158001]

Mr. Meacher: It is for local authorities to operate the discretionary hardship rate relief scheme for businesses affected by foot and mouth disease in rural areas and take up will depend on what type of scheme is introduced by the authority. It is too early to estimate how many businesses will apply for these schemes.

Mr. Green: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many of the measures announced by the Minister for the Environment in his statement on foot and mouth of 20 March 2001, Official Report, columns 191–93, have been implemented in full; and if he will make a statement. [158004]

Mr. Meacher: Of the measures announced on 20th March, we have taken the statutory measures necessary to introduce additional financial support for local authority discretionary hardship rate relief schemes to help businesses affected by foot and mouth disease in rural areas and issued guidance to authorities. Implementation is for authorities and many have announced their intention to introduce a scheme. The deferral of tax, VAT and NIC payments is being considered on a case by case basis in response to applications by business. The Small Business Service is providing advice and business support and extension of the Small Firms Loan Guarantee Scheme was announced on 6th April. The details of operation of the matched funding scheme for charities were announced by the Countryside Agency on 28th March.

Mr. Green: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what representations he has received from the Local Government Association about (a) the cost of district councils' contribution to the rate relief package announced on 20 March and (b) the list of councils whose business ratepayers are eligible for relief. [157996]

Mr. Meacher: I and Ministerial colleagues have met with representatives of the Local Government Association to discuss operation of the discretionary hardship rate relief scheme for businesses affected by foot and mouth disease in rural areas. Members of the Association have put forward concerns on the application of the scheme to larger businesses, the 5 per cent. contribution made by local authorities, and additions to the list of 151 authorities to whom the scheme applies.

Mr. Green: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what representations he has received from district councils about the cost of their contribution to the rate relief package announced on 20 March. [157995]

Mr. Meacher: I have received representations from district councils with mixed urban and rural areas who have sought to be included with the 151 rural authorities who will benefit from the higher rate of contribution to the costs of hardship rate relief which I have made available.

In addition I understand that some small rural district authorities are concerned that it will be difficult for them to find the 5 per cent. of the cost which the scheme requires.

Mr. Green: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many times the Rural Taskforce has met; and what budget has been allocated to it. [157994]

Mr. Meacher: The Rural Taskforce has now met four times under my chairmanship, and the fifth meeting will be on Wednesday 11 April. The costs involved in providing support for the Taskforce are being met from the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions' running costs budget.

Railway Disruption

Mr. Hurst: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what measures he is taking to ensure rail passengers affected by the recent disruptions are compensated; and if he will make a statement. [158070]

Mr. Hill: Late last year, train operators announced two compensation packages totalling £70 million for passengers with monthly or longer season tickets whose journeys were severely disrupted by speed restrictions, Railtrack's track renewal programme and widespread flooding. Weekly and daily ticket holders can claim compensation for delays under their train operator's Passenger Charter. Bidders for replacement franchises will be expected to improve on current Passenger Charter obligations.

Virgin Trains

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will publish the grounds on which the Strategic Rail Authority agreed to Virgin Trains' proposals for a 10 per cent. increase in rail fares. [157783]

Mr. Hill: The increases announced by Virgin relate in the main to unregulated fares. Under the terms of its franchise, any increase in unregulated fares is a commercial matter for Virgin. However, in the light of recent disruption on the rail network, and the wish to attract more passengers to rail, the Government find Virgin's announcement regrettable. The Strategic Rail Authority will be meeting representatives from Virgin shortly to discuss the matter.

Departmental Policies (Camden)

Ms Glenda Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will set out the effects, with statistical information on (a) Hampstead and Highgate and (b) the London borough of Camden of his Department's policies since 2 May 1997. [158020]

Ms Beverley Hughes: The principal funding that this Department has provided to the London borough of Camden since 2 May 1997 is shown in the table. This includes grants and borrowing approvals for revenue and capital expenditure.

It is not possible to determine how much of this money has been spent on Hampstead and Highgate. It is for the local authority to decide where within its boundary these resources are applied.

Single Regeneration Budget (SRB) Schemes

London borough of Camden are the accountable body for the West Euston and the All Change at Camden Central SRB Schemes. There are three other SRB schemes that cover parts of the borough, which are run in partnership with other London boroughs and other external stakeholders.

West Euston

The West Euston Scheme was approved under SRB Round 3 and covers an area bounded by Euston Station in the East, Euston road to the South and Albany street to the West. The scheme's key objectives are to regenerate the West Euston area, to create economic opportunities, to make the area safe and secure to live and work, and to assist the unification of the community. Major projects cover racial integration, training, housing improvements and facilities for the elderly in the community.

All Change at Camden Central

The scheme aims to transform the lives of deprived and socially excluded people living in parts of Somers Town, St. Pancras, Regent's Park and Camden wards. Its objectives are to address inequalities through capacity building; education, employment and training initiatives; accessible I.T. provision; community safety and anti-social behaviour measures; health and sports provision; and housing improvements.

The other SRB schemes that cover parts of London borough of Camden are New Commitment to Kilburn (Brent and Camden), which received £6.599 million in total funding; Kings Cross, which received £37.5 million; and Young People, Drugs and Crime in Gospel Oak (Camden and Islington) which received £1.0 million.

Single Rail Franchise (Wales)

Mr. Simon Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will publish the date for the commencement of the single rail franchise for Wales; and if he will make a statement. [158096]

Mr. Hill: The Strategic Rail Authority announced on 15 February that Arriva plc/Connex Transport UK Ltd., FirstGroup plc, National Express Group plc and Serco Rail had been shortlisted to compete for the Wales and Borders franchise. It is not possible to publish a commencement date as there is no set timetable for awarding this franchise.

Advisory Group on Motorcycling

Mr. Pound: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the progress of the Advisory Group on Motorcycling. [158177]

Mr. Hill: The Advisory Group on Motorcycling has been meeting since May 1999 to discuss issues of concern to those who ride motorcycles. The Government are today publishing an Interim Report of the Advisory Group on Motorcycling. Copies have been placed in the Library of the House.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Miners (Compensation)

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will publish the number of claims and the amount of compensation paid to ex-miners under the (a) miners' compensation scheme and (b) vibration white finger scheme in the Caerphilly parliamentary constituency. [157545]

Mr. Hain: The Department's claim handling agents, IRISC, have registered 3,268 claims in respect of chronic bronchitis and emphysema from claimants in the Caerphilly constituency, as defined by post codes CF46, CF81, CF82, CF83 and NP1. As at 4 April the Department had settled 93 claims in full, and made a further 896 interim settlements.

In addition, IRISC have registered 2,282 claims in respect of Vibration White Finger from claimants in the Caerphilly constituency. As at 4 April the Department had settled 466 claims in full, and made a further 360 interim settlements.

In total the Department has paid out nearly £9.3 million in respect of respiratory and Vibration White Finger related compensation in the Caerphilly constituency.

Healthcall Ltd.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what the length of the contractual agreement is between his Department and Healthcall Ltd. in respect of their work in the medical assessment of ex-miners; when the contract will terminate; and if the contract will be re-tendered if the compensation process is unfinished by the end of the current contract. [157582]

Mr. Hain [holding answer 9 April 2001]: The contract signed by the Department with Healthcall Services Ltd. runs for 36 months from 1 November 1999, and is subject to an additional 12 month extension. No decision has been taken at present as to whether the contract will be re-tendered if the assessment process is unfinished. I have met its managers regularly over the past two months to discuss progress in compensation payments and they are co-operating fully in speeding up the system of medical assessments.

Hawk Jets (Exports)

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what support his Department has given to British Aerospace with regard to that company's contract to supply Hawk jets to India; [156885]

(2) which Ministers from his Department have been involved in discussions with (a) BAE and (b) the Indian Government regarding the contract to supply Hawk jets to India. [156886]

Mr. Alan Johnson [holding answer 4 April 2001]: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Defence on 9 April 2001, Official Report, column 367W.

One North East

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how much was spent on industrial investment and environmental improvements by One North East in the Blyth Valley constituency in each year since 1997. [157296]

Mr. Caborn: One North East commenced its operations on 1 April 1999. The total expenditure by One North East since then in the Blyth Valley constituency amounts to £8.94 million as shown in the table.

Year	Single Regeneration Budget	Land and Property Budget
1999–2000	1.917	1.515
2000–01	1.933	3.575

Most expenditure related to industrial investment and environmental improvements but the total does include an element of expenditure on community/social inclusion activity.

National Weights and Measures Laboratory

Valerie Davey: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement about the conclusions of the Quinquennial Review of the National Weights and Measures Laboratory. [158294]

Dr. Howells: The first stage of the five-yearly Review of the National Weights and Measures Laboratory (NWML) has now been completed.

NWML will continue as an Executive Agency of the DTI.

NWML is a regulatory body. The current functions of NWML form a coherent group that benefits from being managed as a whole. Ministers have therefore decided not to proceed with the alternative option considered by the Review, that of transferring the bulk of NWML's work to NPL Management Ltd. (the company which runs the National Physical Laboratory under contract to the DTI) with a small policy unit kept in the DTI. This organisational separation of policy from operations would risk reducing the quality of the work, and has been criticised by interested parties. The present integrated structure is seen as a great strength of NWML.

As announced on 28 July 2000, Official Report, column 1095W, the reviewer recommended that the policy part of NWML should be taken back into the Department organisationally and that the operational part should be contractorised by merger with NPL, which is already contractorised. However, the Review Steering Board recommended that this option should not be proceeded with until a business plan for the merger could be prepared and until Ministers had assessed its value for money and feasibility.

I have now considered the business plan prepared by NPL Management Ltd. and have received further advice from the Review Steering Board. I have also had the benefit of representations made by many interested parties. I accept that the merger with NPL would result in financial savings to the Department, but they are relatively modest. However, I have come to the conclusion that the benefits to the Department, to the users of NWML's services, and to the UK, which arise from having NWML run as an integrated body outweigh these potential savings.

This announcement will appear on the DTI's website.

Post Office

Mr. Dobbin: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has approved the Post Office's five-year Strategic Plan 2001 to 2006; and if he will make a statement. [158292]

Mr. Alan Johnson: The Government have approved the Post Office's five-year Strategic Plan for 2001–06, endorsing the Board's view that this should be the basis on which management should drive the business forward. This is a five-year rolling Plan which is updated annually. The Plan represents a key element in the new arms-length relationship that the Government have established with the Post Office in fulfilment of the reforms described in the White Paper published in July 1999. The Post Office is continuing to build on last year's Plan. Nevertheless, it recognises that there remains much to do in an increasingly competitive marketplace.

The key features of the Strategic Plan are commercially confidential, and as such will not be published. In approving the Plan, the Government have maintained the medium term target for the Post Office to achieve a 13 per cent. return on capital employed for its operational business. This excludes the network of post offices and any non-operational interest arising from past surpluses. Return on capital employed is defined as profit before interest payable and tax, but after operating interest receivable, divided by operating capital employed.

Steel Plants

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans he has to introduce set aside systems for steel plants until the depression in the steel trade ends. [157786]

Mr. Alan Johnson: My Department has no plans to introduce set aside systems for steel plants.

Electrical Waste

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of schemes for retail take-back of electrical waste in (a) Austria, (b) Germany, (c) the Netherlands and (d) Switzerland. [157610]

Ms Hewitt: Detailed assessments for the four named countries have not been undertaken. The formal take-back schemes are relatively new and vary greatly in scope and approach to funding. Direct comparison is difficult. Switzerland (1998) and the Netherlands (1999, 2000) have both legislated for retailer take back but the Government are unaware of any formal assessments by the Swiss or Dutch Governments. Germany has developed a draft ordinance (1999) which is currently the subject of a review. Austria introduced a draft ordinance in 1994 covering only lamps and white goods. This is currently being reviewed by the Austrian authorities.

Pyrolysis

Jane Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will include energy from waste by pyrolysis in the renewables obligation. [157227]

Mr. Hain: No firm commitment can yet be made regarding the status of pyrolysis or other energy from waste technologies under the Renewables Obligation. My Department is still considering the responses to the consultation document on the Obligation. A summary of the responses was published on 20 March, and we will publish our revised proposals as soon as possible.

Jane Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) if he will assess the benefits of energy from waste generated by pyrolysis; [157225]

(2) if his Department will promote energy from waste by small-scale pyrolysis. [157228]

Mr. Hain: Pyrolysis may prove to be a cleaner means of energy recovery from waste than incineration and cost-effective at a smaller scale. This could contribute to achieving the proximity principle proposed in the Government's Waste Strategy and complement local recycling schemes.

My Department is currently supporting three research projects assessing the potential of pyrolysis through its New and Renewable Energy R&D Programme. These are two projects monitoring the waste gas technology installation at the Nash sewage works near Newport, South Wales and a comparative technical assessment of energy conversion technologies for municipal solid waste concentrating on pyrolysis being undertaken by Mitsui Babcock.

In addition, the Department's Programme supported earlier monitoring work with Compact Power that helped them move from pilot to demonstration.

The Programme maintains strong links with the IEA Bioenergy Agreement and through participation in this has access to relevant work in most other OECD countries.

Jane Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will assess the potential effect of pyrolysis on the level of the waste stream to landfill. [157226]

Mr. Hain: The extent to which pyrolysis reduces the volume of waste to landfill depends very much on the pyrolysis technology employed. Some of these technologies produce a glass-like residue that can be used for road aggregate avoiding almost any landfill stream, some a lighter ash and some a charcoal-type material that can be quite bulky. However, I do wish to find ways of encouraging new technology that converts waste into renewable energy, after maximum recycling.

Employment Tribunals (Scotland)

Mr. Grieve: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many persons have been appointed chairman or part-time chairman of employment tribunals in Scotland without being a Scottish advocate or solicitor of not less than seven years' standing. [157611]

Mr. Alan Johnson [holding answer 9 April 2001]: Part-time Chairmen of Employment Tribunals in Scotland are appointed by the Lord President of the Court of Session in accordance with Section 5a of the Employment Tribunals (Constitution and Rules of Procedure) (Scotland) Regulations 1993.

Telecommunications Council

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what the outcome of the Telecommunications Council held in Brussels on 4 and 5 April was; what the Government's voting record at the Council was; and if he will make a statement. [157538]

Ms Hewitt: I represented the UK on the telecommunications aspects of the Transport and Telecommunications Council held in Luxembourg on 4–5 April.

The Council reached political agreement on common positions in respect of three proposals for Directives arising from the European Commission's 1999 communications review: on a common regulatory framework for electronic communications networks and services; on access to, and interconnection of, electronic communications networks and associated facilities; and on the authorisation of electronic communications networks and services. I strongly welcomed this agreement as a significant step toward fostering the competitive communications markets that are a vital element in the European Union's target to be the most successful knowledge economy in the world by 2010.

The Presidency gave a progress report on a fourth proposal for a Directive, on universal service and users' rights relating to electronic communications networks and services.

The Presidency indicated that it expects the Council to reach common positions on all four proposals at the next Transport and Telecommunications Council, to be held in Brussels on 27–28 June.

The Presidency also indicated that it expects the Council to reach common positions on proposals for a Regulation on the implementation of the Internet top level domain "EU" and on amending Directive 97/67/EC with regard to further opening to competition of Community postal services at the next Transport and Telecommunications Council.

The Council also held discussions on a Commission Communication on the introduction of third generation mobile communications in the EU; on the eEurope 2002 Action Plan, including network security and a Commission Communication on creating a safer information society by improving the security of information infrastructures and combating computer-related crime; and on international aspects of the organisation and management of the Internet.

The Commission provided information on implementation by member states of the Regulation on unbundled access to the local loop.

Engineers (Recruitment)

Dr. Iddon: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what targets he has set for the recruitment of engineers in the next 10 years; and what account he has taken of the current level of UCAS acceptances for engineering degrees. [156167]

Mr. Alan Johnson: The Government do not set targets for the recruitment of engineers. However, we do listen carefully to employers when developing strategies to meet future skills needs in engineering. We also take account of statistical data and research reports from a wide variety of sources, including UCAS. The National Training Organisations (NTOs) also have a key role in providing detailed and accurate information on future skills issues across a range of sectors and we hope to see this role developed and enhanced as a result of the current consultation exercise aimed at strengthening the NTO Network.

It has, however, become increasingly apparent that there is a need for improved information on the developing skills needs in engineering over the longer term, particularly in relation to the new technologies. The need for such information was recognised as a key issue for the Hawley Review of the Engineering Council set up by my noble Friend the Minister for Science and Innovation in October 1999. It is currently being considered in further detail by the Education and Training working group set up by the Engineering Council as part of the transitional arrangements for the establishment of the Engineering and Technology Board (ETB) in October 2001. Lord Trefgarne, Chairman of the Engineering and Marine Training Authority (EMTA), the National Training Organisation for engineering manufacture, chairs this group.

The Government recognise the fundamental importance of maintaining an adequate flow of bright and well-motivated people into engineering and we continue to support a wide range of initiatives aimed at promoting engineering as a rewarding and challenging career. These include the Campaign to Promote Engineering (CPE) and the Science Engineering Technology Mathematics Network (SETNET).

The latest initiative in this area is the Science Technology Engineering Mathematics (STEM) Delivery Programme, to which DTI has committed £6 million over the next three years. This aims to provide young people and their science teachers with access to the very best business-sponsored support materials and schemes by providing a single point of support through each Learning and Skills Council area in England (separate arrangements will apply in Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland). The key objective for the programme will be to ensure that every young person in the UK under 16 should have the opportunity to experience an appropriate STEM activity at least once in each Key Stage.

The STEM Delivery Programme will also include the establishment of a nation-wide Science and Engineering Ambassadors Scheme (SEAS) to encourage younger people engaged in careers in science and engineering to go back into schools to encourage others to follow them. This will be launched jointly by DTI and DfEE at the start of Science Year in September 2001.

Departmental Policies (Ribble Valley)

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will set out, with statistical information relating as directly as possible to the Ribble Valley constituency, the effects on Ribble Valley of his Department's policies and actions since 2 May 1997. [157848]

Mr. Caborn: This Department does not maintain statistical information at constituency level.

The people of Ribble Valley, like many others throughout Lancashire, have benefited from my Department's Employment Rights policies which include National Minimum Wage, Working Time Directive, Part Time Working Regulations and improved maternity leave.

In addition, five wards in Ribble Valley are eligible for Enterprise Grant Scheme funding.

In the North West region, my Department's policies have contributed to growth in employment by 107,000 and a fall in unemployment by 63,000; reductions in youth unemployment by 75 per cent. and long-term unemployment by 54 per cent.

Urban 2 Programme

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the progress of the bids under the Urban 2 Programme scheme. [157438]

Mr. Caborn: The Government are still in negotiations with the European Commission about the number of projects which the Commission will accept from the United Kingdom under the new round of the Urban Community Initiative.

Industrial Property

Mr. Salter: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what advisory structure he proposes for intellectual property following the recent review of the Standing Advisory Committee on Industrial Property. [158293]

Dr. Howells: I propose to reform the Standing Advisory Committee on Industrial Property in line with the recommendations of the recent review of SACIP. The review identifies a need for the Patent Office and DTI Ministers to have access to independent, horizon-scanning advice on intellectual property in the round, which would allow us to view policy in its broad economic and social context. The committee's name will be changed to the IP Advisory Committee. It will have new terms of reference and its remit will include copyright as well as patents, trade marks and designs. Members will be appointed in accordance with the guidance from the Office of the Commissioner for Public Appointments.

Mox Fuel

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on UK-US collaboration on Mox fuel development. [156372]

Mr. Hain: I am not aware of any such collaboration.

Motor Vehicle Body Repairs

Mr. Stevenson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if the Director General of Fair Trading will include motor vehicle body repair in the inquiry into standards in the vehicle servicing and repair sector. [157125]

Dr. Howells: The Director General of Fair Trading completed his inquiry into the car servicing and repair industry and reported his conclusions in August last year. His inquiry concentrated on the provision of routine maintenance and the replacement, repair and adjustment of defective parts and components, as the majority of consumer complaints he received were about these subjects.

I understand that the Director General has no plans to conduct any further inquiries into the car repair sector at present.

Paypoint Terminals

Mr. Todd: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, pursuant to his answer of 2 April 2001, Official Report, column 4W, on paypoint terminals, what assessment he has made of the implications for competitiveness in convenient bill payment facilities of the Post Office's policy. [157631]

Mr. Alan Johnson: This issue was reviewed by the Office of Fair Trading in 1998 whose conclusion was that the Post Office policy in this regard neither created a significant issue for consumers nor constituted a barrier to competitors, such as PayPoint, except to a very marginal degree.

The Performance and Innovation Unit also examined Post Office policy in this area and concluded in their June 2000 report "Counter Revolution Modernising the Post Office Network" that there were good network-sustaining reasons for such a policy.

Electricity Supplies

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what regulations on interruptions to domestic electricity supplies will apply from April 2002; and what compensation will be available to residents whose supply is significantly interrupted after that date. [157583]

Mr. Hain: Regulations 17 and 23(1) of the Electricity Supply Regulations 1988, as amended, cover interruptions to domestic electricity supplies. Regulation 17 relates to the sufficiency of an electricity supplier's works and regulation 23(1) relates to the precautions, which a supplier has to take against supply failure. These requirements are to be carried forward in the draft Electricity Safety, Quality and Continuity Regulations 2001. These draft regulations, which are currently at the public consultation stage, are expected to be in force by the end of this year.

Compensation payable to a resident if supply is not restored in a given time is covered by the Office of Gas and Electricity Market's (OFGEM's) Guaranteed Standards of performance. This is currently £50 plus £25 for each additional 12 hours if electricity supply is not restored within 18 hours of a fault. It is recognised, however, that changes to the Guaranteed Standards will be required from April 2002 but this is a matter that is currently under discussion. Also under consideration is a new Guaranteed Standard which covers the level of compensation payable to residents who have suffered more than a specified number of interruptions in a given period of time. That standard will apply from April 2002.

Hollis Industries

Mr. Lilley: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he was advised that the inquiry into Hollis Industries had obtained evidence of an invoice of £200,000 payable to the hon. Member for Coventry, North-West (Mr. Robinson). [157165]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 6 April 2001]: I refer the right hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Lewes (Mr. Baker), on 2 April 2001, Official Report, columns 5–6W. This makes it clear that, acting on the advice of my Permanent Secretary, I ruled myself out of the involvement in the inquiries into the companies associated with my hon. Friend the Member for Coventry, North-West (Mr. Robinson), principally Hollis Industries plc. As a result I did not see or receive advice on any evidence obtained during these inquiries.

Mr. Lilley: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, pursuant to his answer of 2 April 2001, Official Report, column 7W, on Hollis Industries, if he will place in the Library the advice to which he refers. [157167]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 6 April 2001]: As the right hon. Member is aware, the actual confidential minutes containing advice from officials to Ministers are not published. This has been the practice under successive administrations.

However, the statement issued by the Department on 23 March 2001 made it clear that I received advice from the Permanent Secretary on 8 January 1999 that I should rule myself out of any inquiries into companies associated with my hon. Friend the Member for Coventry, North-West (Mr. Robinson), or out of any decisions that needed to be taken but that this matter should be delegated to officials. I accepted this advice.

Grant-making Schemes

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list each grant-making scheme and initiative which has been launched by his Department since May 1997, together with funds available for distribution in 2001–02. [157162]

Dr. Howells: Information on the Department's schemes and initiatives together with planned expenditure for 2001–02 and outturns are available in the annual Expenditure Plans Reports, copies of which are available in the Library of the House.

A list of main grant-making schemes and initiatives launched by the Department since May 1997 is as set out.

Departmental Policies (Tiverton and Honiton)

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will set out, with statistical information relating as directly as possible to the Tiverton and Honiton constituency, the effects on Tiverton and Honiton of his Department's policies and actions since 2 May 1997. [157806]

Mr. Caborn: The Department has provided the following support for businesses in Tiverton and Honiton Constituency since May 1997.

Enterprise Grants

The Enterprise Grants scheme is a simplified scheme that was introduced in April 2000 to help small firms undertake fixed capital investment projects. Two offers totalling £2,965 have been made to firms in the Tiverton and Honiton constituency.

Smart

Smart awards are designed to help small firms with the introduction of new products and processes. Four Smart awards totalling £268,125 have been made to firms in the Tiverton and Honiton constituency.

Business Link

PROSPER Business Link has provided services to small businesses in the Tiverton and Honiton constituency since 1997. These include general and specialised advice to help businesses grow, export development counselling, ICT advice, and a full range of specialist information. From April 2001 these services will be provided by the Small Business Service operating through a franchise awarded to a PROSPER led partnership. This new service will be more customer focused ensuring that services are driven by local need.

Ministerial Conference, Doha

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry where and when the strategic goals to be pursued by the European Union at the four Ministerial Conference of the World Trade Organisation scheduled for Doha in November were (a) agreed and (b) made public; and which Ministers and officials were present when the goals were agreed. [157327]

Mr. Caborn: The EU's aims for a New Round of multilateral trade talks were set out ahead of the three Ministerial Conference of the World Trade Organisation (WTO) at Seattle in the General Affairs Council (GAC) Conclusions of 26 October 1999. Those aims were discussed in European Standing Committee C on Monday 22 November 1999 and the Government's proposals were accepted.

The GAC in Seattle on 3 December 1999, attended by myself and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, confirmed the EU's comprehensive approach to a New Round.

Following the failure at Seattle to launch a New Round, the UK has been fully involved in reviewing the EU's position through numerous discussions at Ministerial and official level. These include a Ministerial meeting in Porto which I and other EU Trade Ministers attended, on 17–18 March 2000, and most recently another Ministerial meeting of EU Trade Ministers on 25 February 2001, which I attended.

The EU is still seeking the launch of a comprehensive round of talks: we maintain that only a broad-based inclusive agenda can encompass priority issues for every WTO Member, increasing the incentive to tackle more difficult areas and so bringing greatest benefits to all.

The EU's principle of a comprehensive mandate was supported by the House of Lords Select Committee on the European Union in its report on the EU Mandate after Seattle (HL Paper 76: published 13 June 2000). That report noted the need for it to be pragmatic and flexible in its execution of that mandate.

DEFENCE

Advanced Short Range Air-to-Air Missile

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list (a) the original in-service date, (b) the revised in-service date and (c) the latest expected in-service date for ASRAAM; and if he will make a statement. [157179]

Dr. Moonie [holding answer 9 April 2001]: The in-service date set at the main approval point for ASRAAM was December 1998. Technical problems with the missile hardware and software, combined with a decision to alter the delivery programme to align better with the candidate aircraft, resulted in the approval of a revised in-service date of April 2001.

Matra BAE Dynamics (MBD), the prime contractor for ASRAAM, has not yet achieved the missile performance level required by the Ministry of Defence (MOD). The company has encountered a number of technical problems, which have caused some delay to the programme and mean that the in-service date of April 2001 will not be achieved. The MOD is not prepared to take delivery of any missiles until MBD can show that an acceptable standard can be met. However, we have made clear to the company the need to resolve the problems and to agree a revised programme to its entry into service. Until that time, Tornado F3, Harrier GR9 and Sea Harrier FA2 aircraft will continue to have an effective short-range air-to-air capability using Sidewinder missiles.

Agency Performance Targets

Mr. Coaker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what performance targets have been set for the Naval Manning Agency for 2001–02. [158296]

Mr. Spellar: The Key Targets that have been set for the Chief Executive of the Naval Manning Agency for the financial year 2001–02 are set out. The targets build upon progress made by the Agency since it formed on 1 July 1996.

(b) The percentage of filled rating billets to be—92 per cent. or greater.

(c) The percentage of filled other rank billets to be—90 per cent. or greater.

Manpower Planning:

The variation of strength to requirement to be—between plus ½ and minus 2 per cent.

Career Management:

(a) The percentage of Officers receiving the required Notice of Change to be—60 per cent. or greater.

(b) The percentage of ratings receiving the required Notice of Change to be—98 per cent. or greater.

(c) the number of occurrences where Minimum Time Ashore criteria are met to be—99 per cent. or greater.

NMA Corporate Efficiency:

(a) To achieve strict control of NMA manpower overheads to within plus or minus 2 per cent. of the baseline established for manpower overheads as at 1 April 2000.

(b) To carry out two benchmarking exercises.

(c) To achieve a Customer Confidence Score of 63.

Financial:

(a) To operate the NMA within zero to minus 1 per cent. of its 2001–02 Net Cash-Allocation for Operating Activities.

(b) Production of Annual Accrual Accounts to be completed by July 2002.

Mr. Coaker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what key targets have been set for the Naval Recruiting and Training Agency for 2001–02. [158297]

Mr. Spellar: These key targets have been set for the Naval Recruiting and Training Agency for 2001–02:

To deliver RN personnel to the trained strength (or to other training organisations) within 4 per cent. variance from the tasked requirement.

To deliver RM recruits to Commandant General Royal marines within 3 per cent. variance from the tasked requirement.

To obtain 96 per cent. "Satisfactory" assessments from the employers of NRTA trainees.

To maintain success rates of 95 per cent. in Career Training and 97 per cent. in examined pre-joining training.

To reduce the variance between RNR Trained Strength and Total Requirement to 32 per cent.

To retain tasked capacity while operating NRTA within its 2000–01 resource allocation.

To achieve net benefits of £12 million in FY 2001–02 from the partnering arrangement with Flagship Training Ltd.

Mrs. Golding: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what performance targets have been set for the Defence Communication Services Agency for 2001–02. [158298]

Mr. Spellar: Key Targets have been set for the Chief Executive of the DCSA for the financial year 2001–02. The targets build on the progress already made by the Agency since it formed in April 1998 and are:

Key Target 1—Service Assurance

To meet an average of 98 per cent. for measured services against the performance targets agreed with the Agency's customers.

Key Target 2—Service Positioning

To commission on average 93 per cent. of new information service requests on, or before, the dates agreed with customers when the order is initially agreed by the DCSA.

Key Target 3—Operationally Urgent Service Restoration

To restore an average 96 per cent. of interrupted services classed as operationally urgent within four hours of the fault being reported to the DCSA, or within other specific periods agreed with customers.

Key Target 4—Service Support

To achieve an 85 per cent. average success rate against agreed standards in response to demands on all DCSA Operator Assistance Centres (OACs) and helpdesk facilities.

BEST COPY AVAILABLE

Key Target 5—Customer Satisfaction

To achieve a 75 per cent. average of customers/users who express moderate or high satisfaction with the way they have been treated by the Agency and the subsequent services and support provided by the DCSA.

Key Target 6—Efficiency Measurement

To achieve an improvement in efficiency by reducing the average unit cost of output for DCSA products by 5 per cent. per annum.

Key Target 7—Introduction of New Projects on Time

To determine a baseline for the average cumulative slippage of complex projects' In Service Dates (ISD) and then to set performance improvements to reduce that figure.

Non-lethal Weapons

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many times officials from his Department have held meetings with the United States Department of Defence under the information exchange agreement on non-lethal weapons systems signed on 2 February 1998 under the US-UK Master Information Exchange Memorandum of Understanding on non-lethal weapons; when and where each meeting was held; and with which section of the United States Department of Defence each meeting was held. [157343]

Mr. Hoon: Five formal meetings have been held:

13–14 May 1998 at Farnborough (UK)

18–19 November 1998 at San Antonio

29–30 April 1999 at Quantico, Virginia

21 January 2000 at Quantico, Virginia

1 December 2000 in London.

Under the auspices of the Master Information Exchange Memorandum of Understanding on Non-Lethal Weapons there have also been a series of non-lethal weapons-related wargames, now completed, as follows:

19–20 January 2000 at Quantico, Virginia

11–14 April 2000 at quantico, Virginia

13–16 June 2000 at Carlisle (US)

12–15 September 2000 at Newport (US)

29–30 November 2000 in London.

All these meetings were held with the US Joint Non-Lethal Weapons Directorate.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many information exchanges have been signed under the US-UK Master Information Exchange Memorandum of Understanding on non-lethal weapons since 18 November 1994; on what date and at what location and with which section of the US Department of Defense each information exchange was signed. [157301]

Mr. Hoon: One Annexe to the Master Information Exchange Memorandum of Understanding on non-lethal weapons has been signed: UK-RN-N-97-5951 on Non-lethal Weapons Systems. This was signed on 2 February 1998, with a duration of five years, at Quantico, Virginia with the US Joint Non-Lethal Weapons Directorate.

Heavy Lift Aircraft

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many heavy lift aircraft there are in the UK; and how many more will be acquired as a part of the Strategic Defence Review. [157862]

Mr. Hoon: The Strategic Defence Review concluded that we needed to improve our strategic airlift capability to allow us to move forces and equipment quickly to an overseas theatre. In my statement on 16 May 2000, Official Report, columns 149–61, I announced the intention to order 25 A400M to fulfil our long-term outsize airlift requirements from the latter part of the decade.

I also announced that we would be leasing four C-17 aircraft to improve our strategic airlift capability until A400M enters service. This contract has now been signed and we expect to take delivery of the aircraft in May this year.

The RAF's heavy lift capability is currently provided by the following in-service aircraft types:

Aircraft type	Number in-service
C-130J	[1]15
C-130K	[2]39
VC10 C Mk 1 K	11
TriStar KC Mk 1	4

[1] Of the 25 ordered, 17 have been delivered to date, of which two are completing the acceptance process

[2] The C-130K fleet size is planned to reduce progressively to 26 aircraft as C-130J deliveries are completed

Macedonia (Rules of Engagement)

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what British troops are stationed on the Macedonian border; and what their rules of engagement are. [157863]

Mr. Spellar: At the end of March, the British-led Task Force CAMBRAI deployed to the US-led sector in MNB(E), with an area of responsibility which includes a stretch of the Kosovo/Macedonian border. This Task Force currently totals some 400, of whom some 200 are British troops.

The rules of engagement for British troops in MNB(E) are robust, as they are for other UK troops serving in KFOR.

Defence Jobs (Coventry)

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many jobs in Coventry are dependent on the UK defence industry. [157864]

Dr. Moonie: I will write to my hon. Friend and a copy of my letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

Amphibious Landing Vessels

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what the capabilities will be of the amphibious landing vessels that will replace the existing ones. [157865]

Mr. Hoon: The Alternative Landing Ships Logistic (ALSLs) are designed for the carriage and offload at sea of troops, their equipment and stores, including ammunition, directly into a potentially hostile environment. They represent an important element of the modernisation of the UK amphibious capability foreseen in the Strategic Defence Review.

The current Landing Ships Logistics (LSLs) are mostly over 30 years old and of decreasing utility. The four new ALSLs will each have double the Linear Metre capacity of an LSL, thus providing greater vehicle and equipment carriage to support the embarked troops. This represents a marked increase in our amphibious lift capability. The ALSLs will be able to offload troops more quickly, by sea and air simultaneously, at a safer distance, and in significantly worse sea conditions. They can also provide tactical logistics support to land forces, and are flexible ships which can undertake a wide variety of other military tasks.

General Service Medal

Mr. Sawford: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to award a general service medal to veterans of the Suez emergency. [157987]

Dr. Moonie: The Suez operation of 1956 is recognised by the "Near East" clasp to the General Service Medal. There are no plans to institute a medal for the earlier period of emergency from 1951 onwards. The then Under-Secretary of State for Defence, my hon. Friend the Member for Warley (Mr. Spellar), reviewed the matter in 1998 and found no evidence that he believed would enable him to persuade the Committee on the Grant of Honours, Decorations and Medals to overturn their policy of non-retrospection, or to revoke any of the decisions made at the time or following various Departmental reviews since 1990. No such evidence has subsequently come to light.

TREASURY

Limited Liability Partnerships

Barbara Follett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what powers he has to authorise limited liability partnerships under the Financial Services and Markets Act 2000. [158182]

Miss Melanie Johnson: From 6 April 2001, businesses are able to organise themselves as limited liability partnerships (LLPs), in addition to other existing business structures.

The effect of EC law is to prevent insurance business being undertaken by LLPs. We will ensure FSMA is consistent with that.

There is no evidence of interest in banking (ie deposit-taking) businesses seeking to be organised as LLPs. Were there any evidence of interest in using the LLP structure, we would need to examine the issues closely.

LLPs carrying on financial services business, other than insurance or deposit taking, may seek authorisation under the FSMA from the Financial Services Authority after N2.

Departmental Administration Expenditure

Mr. St. Aubyn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what the latest estimate is, measured in (a) resource accounting terms and (b) resource accounting terms at 2001 prices, of the planned increase in the annual total gross expenditure on administration by all Departments from 1996–97 to 2003–04; [157875]

(2) what the latest estimate is, measured in (a) cash terms and (b) cash terms at 2001 prices, of the planned increase in the annual total gross expenditure on administration costs by all Departments from 1996–97 to 2003–04. [157874]

Mr. Andrew Smith: Public Expenditure Statistical Analyses (PESA) 2000–01 (Cm 4601, 2000) published the final set of departmental administration cost plans on a cash basis. In accordance with "Better Accounting for the Taxpayer's Money" (Cm 2626, 1994), Departments were required to produce resource information from April 1998. This year's edition of PESA 2001–02 (Cm 5101, 2001) contains resource-based administration cost plans from that date, although estimates for the earlier years are included in footnote six.

The latest GDP deflator is published on the Treasury website (www.hm-treasury.gov.uk).

Disabled Persons Tax Credit

Ms Glenda Jackson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many people in Hampstead and Highgate will benefit from the recent rise in Disabled Persons Tax Credit. [158012]

Dawn Primarolo: I refer my hon. Friend to my answer to my hon. Friend the Member for Lancaster and Wyre (Mr. Dawson) on 22 January 2001, Official Report, column 425. All recipients of the Disabled Persons Tax Credit will benefit from this month's increases, and from the further increase to the basic credit in June.

Energy-saving Materials

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make it his policy to extend the reduced rate of VAT on energy-saving materials to energy-saving materials sold direct for fitting by the purchaser. [157888]

Dawn Primarolo: Energy-saving materials sold direct to the public are not included in the list of goods and services to which, under agreements with our European partners, a reduced rate of VAT may apply. We will be seeking their inclusion as a result of the European Commission's general review of reduced rates planned for 2003.

Pay-slip Booklets

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many pay-slip booklets for the 12-month period commencing April 2001 were re-issued by the Inland Revenue; for what reason the re-issue was necessary; and what the total cost of re-issuing the booklets was. [157896]

Dawn Primarolo: The Inland Revenue issues approximately 1.3 million pay-slip booklets during February/March each year to all employers, for their use in making payment in the year commencing on the following 6 April. Thereafter, the IR issues booklets weekly to new employers and to those employers who have requested a re-issue due to loss, eg because of change of address or damage. Re-issues are not counted separately from new cases but the average weekly issue of 100 since the bulk issue does not suggest re-issues are occurring on a wide scale for a particular reason.

European Community (Contributions)

Mr. Gerald Howarth: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will set out the annual (a) gross and (b) net contributions to the European Community made by the United Kingdom since 1973. [157398]

Miss Melanie Johnson [holding answer 6 April 2001]: Details of the United Kingdom's gross contributions, abatement, public sector receipts and net contributions for the period 1973–74 to 1998–99 can be obtained from various Departmental Reports of the Chancellor of the Exchequer's Departments or, previously, Government Expenditure Plans.

The net contribution figure for 1999–2000, and the Government's latest estimate for 2000–01, can be found at footnote 2 to Table C11 of the Budget 2001 (HC 279) published in March. Details of these two figures, ie gross contribution, abatement and public sector receipts, will be included in this year's Departmental Report of the Chancellor of the Exchequer's Departments.

Widowers

Mr. Baker: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to pay retrospectively widower's bereavement payments to all men widowed between 6 April 1994 and 5 April 2000 who paid tax in (a) the year in which they were widowed and (b) the following year. [157856]

Dawn Primarolo: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer I gave the hon. Member for Argyll and Bute (Mrs. Michie) on 23 November 2000, Official Report, column 317W.

Departmental Policies (Ribble Valley)

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will set out, with statistical information relating as directly as possible to the Ribble Valley constituency, the effects on Ribble Valley of his Department's policies and actions since 2 May 1997. [157843]

Mr. Timms: Ribble Valley, along with the rest of the United Kingdom, is benefiting from the long-term action we have taken to build economic stability and secure high and stable levels of growth and employment. Since the general election, claimant unemployment in the constituency has fallen by 436, or 45 per cent., youth unemployment is down by 77 per cent., and long-term unemployment has fallen by 70 per cent.

Macro-economic stability is being complemented at the micro-economic level by the Government's policies to ease the transition from welfare into work and to make work pay. To the end of January 2001, the new deal for 18–24 year olds had helped 215 young people in Ribble Valley constituency gain valuable skills and experience—114 (53 per cent.) of whom had moved into employment. The Working Families Tax Credit (WFTC), introduced in October 1999, is helping to make work pay for low and middle-income families. In August 2000, 1,400 families in the constituency were benefiting from WFTC.

The Government are also committed to policies that enable pensioners to share in the country's rising prosperity. All pensioners, including 18,800 in Ribble Valley, will receive an above-inflation increase in the basic state pension from April 2001. Single pensioners will receive an extra £5 a week, and couples will receive an extra £8 a week. All pensioners aged 75 or over have also been entitled to a free TV licence since November 2000—including around 7,500 in Ribble Valley.

Departmental Policies (Tiverton and Honiton)

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will set out, with statistical information relating as directly as possible to the Tiverton and Honiton constituency, the effects on Tiverton and Honiton of his Department's policies and actions since 2 May 1997. [157811]

Mr. Timms: Tiverton and Honiton, along with the rest of the United Kingdom, are benefiting from the long-term action we have taken to build economic stability and secure high and stable levels of growth and employment. Since the general election, claimant unemployment in the constituency has fallen by 562, or 39 per cent., youth unemployment is down by 84 per cent., and long-term unemployment has fallen by 73 per cent.

Macro-economic stability is being complemented at the micro-economic level by the Government's policies to ease the transition from welfare into work and to make work pay. To the end of January 2001, the New Deal for 18 to 24-year-olds had helped 423 young people in Tiverton and Honiton constituency gain valuable skills and experience—236 (56 per cent.) of whom had moved into employment. The Working Families Tax Credit (WFTC), introduced in October 1999, is helping to make work pay for low and middle income families. In August 2000, 2,100 families in the constituency were benefiting from WFTC.

The Government are also committed to policies that enable pensioners to share in the country's rising prosperity. All pensioners, including 22,500 in Tiverton and Honiton, will receive an above-inflation increase in the basic state pension from April 2001. Single pensioners will receive an extra £5 a week, and couples will receive an extra £8 a week. All pensioners aged 75 or over have also been entitled to a free TV licence since November 2000—including around 9,700 in Tiverton and Honiton.

Foot and Mouth

Mr. Todd: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will permit the early review of the working families tax credit assessments of those affected by foot and mouth disease. [157596]

Dawn Primarolo: Families whose income is affected by the foot and mouth outbreak may be able to take advantage of the working families tax credit by applying to the Inland Revenue. The Tax Credit Office helpline—which can advise on eligibility and issue application forms—can be contacted on 0845 609 5000 in Great Britain and 0845 609 7000 in Northern Ireland.

Mrs. Gilroy: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received about the operation of the Working Families Tax Credit in relation to small businesses which are suffering a substantial reduction in cash flow as a result of foot and mouth disease; and if he will make a statement. [157223]

Dawn Primarolo: An employer who does not have enough PAYE tax, National Insurance contributions or student loan deductions out of which to pay the Working Families Tax Credit that is due to an employee can telephone the Inland Revenue Accounts Office to ask for additional funding. We are aware of only one such request to date as a result of cash flow problems arising from foot and mouth disease. The necessary funding was provided in this case.

Motorcycling (VAT)

Mr. Todd: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer pursuant to his answer of 2 April 2001, Official Report, column 46W, on motorcycling (VAT), if he will reduce VAT on vital replacement parts for motorcycle helmets and safety clothing worn by motorcyclists, to the lowest applicable rate. [157632]

Dawn Primarolo: Replacement parts for motorcycle helmets and safety clothing worn by motorcyclists are subject to VAT at the standard rate. EU law does not permit a reduced rate for such items.

Epilepsy

Mr. O'Hara: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many deaths from epilepsy were recorded in the periods between (a) 1 November 1999 and 28 February 2001 and (b) 1 November 1997 and 28 February 1999. [157553]

Mr. Timms [holding answer 9 April 2001]: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the National Statistician. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Karen Dunnell to Mr. Eddie O'Hara, dated 10 April 2001:

The National Statistician has been asked to reply to your recent question about the number of deaths from epilepsy recorded between (a) 1 November 1999 and 28 February 2001 and (b) 1 November 1997 and 28 February 1999 (157553). I am replying in his absence.

There were 1,144 deaths from epilepsy (classified according to the International Classification of Diseases Ninth Revision, ICD(9)345) occurring between 1 November 1977 and 28 February 1999. Information is not yet available on the number of deaths that occurred between 1 November 1999 and 28 February 2001. Data based on date of occurrence of death in 2000 will not be available until October 2001.

Minimum Wage

Ms Glenda Jackson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many people in Hampstead and Highgate will benefit from the uprating of the national minimum wage. [158022]

Mr. Timms: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the National Statistician. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Karen Dunnell to Ms Glenda Jackson, dated 10 April 2001:

The National Statistician has been asked to reply to your recent question about the number of people in Hampstead and Highgate who will benefit from the uprating of the national minimum wage (NMW) (158022). I am replying in his absence.

The Office for National Statistics has published estimates of the number of jobs paid at less than NMW rates for 1998, 1999 and 2000. These estimates are based on an improved methodology using data from the New Earnings Survey (NES) and Labour Force Survey (LFS). This methodology provides the best estimates for the number of jobs in the UK paid below low hourly rate thresholds and was developed to overcome the deficiencies inherent in using the NES and LFS separately for measuring low pay.

Estimates for the United Kingdom and Government Office Regions are posted on the National Statistics website at: www.statistics.gov.uk/nsbase/themes/labour-market/nmw-lowpay-tables.asp

Estimates for Parliamentary Constituencies of numbers of jobs paid below NMW rates are not available on the basis of the methodology applied for producing the national and regional level figures.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many people in Pendle benefited from the introduction of the national minimum wage; and how many are estimated to benefit from its recent increase. [157772]

Mr. Timms: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the National Statistician. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Karen Dunnell to Mr. Gordon Prentice, dated 10 April 2001:

The National Statistician has been asked to reply to your recent question about the number of people in Pendle who have benefited from the introduction of the national minimum wage (NMW), and the number who will benefit from the increase to £4.10 (157772). I am replying in his absence.

The Office for National Statistics has published estimates of the number of jobs paid at less than NMW rates for 1998, 1999 and 2000. These estimates are based on an improved methodology using data from the New Earnings Survey (NES) and Labour Force Survey (LFS). This methodology provides the best estimates for the number of jobs in the UK paid below low hourly rate thresholds and was developed to overcome the deficiencies inherent in using the NES and LFS separately for measuring low pay.

Estimates for Parliamentary Constituencies of numbers of jobs paid below NMW rates are not available on the basis of the methodology applied for producing the national and regional level figures.

Ministerial Residences

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the budget figure for the cost of maintaining, servicing and victualling official residences for Ministers in the 2000–01 Budget year. [146373]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 22 January 2001]: This is a matter for the Prime Minister, who answered the right hon. Gentleman's question on 2 February 2001, Official Report, columns 331–32W.

Motor Insurance

Mr. Stevenson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of (a) the value of United Kingdom motor insurance claims and (b) the number of such claims in (i) 1999 and (ii) 2000. [157139]

Mr. Timms: Statistics on United Kingdom motor insurance claims are published annually by the Association of British Insurers. Such market trends are kept under review.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Holocaust Denial

Mrs. Ellman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions he has held with EU colleagues in relation to legislation against holocaust denial; and if he will make a statement. [156113]

Mr. Vaz: Holocaust denial was discussed in January at the Stockholm International Forum on Combating Intolerance, at which my right hon. Friend the Minister of State for Home Affairs led the UK delegation. The Government continue to play a leading role in post-Holocaust affairs, in particular through their active membership of the International Task Force on Holocaust Education, Remembrance and Research, and through its role as Account Holder for the Nazi Persecution Relief Fund. The Government have also been closely following developments on slave/forced labour compensation and have made clear that they expect fair treatment for any eligible British citizens.

Visa Applications

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to the answer to my hon. Friend the Member for Bury St. Edmunds (Mr. Ruffley), of 22 March 2001, Official Report, column 317W, on visas, how many of the cases in which the Minister for Europe intervened related to (a) his constituency and (b) the Indian sub-continent. [156356]

Mr. Vaz [holding answer 30 March 2001]: (a) None. (b) I have overturned 34 decisions related to the sub-continent since October 1999. This represents 0.01 per cent. of over 308,000 applications received in the sub-continent in that period.

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on how many occasions (a) he and (b) the Minister for Europe have replied personally to representations by hon. Members concerning refusals of visa applications lodged in (i) Islamabad, (ii) Delhi and (iii) Bombay since 1999. [156529]

Mr. Vaz [holding answer 2 April 2001]: Hon. Members' representations about visa refusals are not recorded separately. The information requested could be collected only at disproportionate cost by examining all the case files for the posts in question since 1999.

Air Passenger Duty

Mr. Austin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what representations he has received from the EU associated member states regarding changes to air passenger duty; and if he will make a statement; [156826]

(2) what discussions he has had with the Republic of Slovenia regarding changes to air passenger duty. [156828]

Mr. Vaz: The Slovenian Ambassador wrote to my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary on 22 September 2000 on behalf of 11 negotiating EU applicants (all except Hungary) to ask if we could bring forward the application of the European Economic Area rate to Slovenia and other EU associate member countries.

After detailed consultation with other Government Departments, in particular HM Custom and Excise, the Foreign Secretary replied formally on 5 February 2001 that we could not as this was a taxation issue with both legislative and revenue consequences. In response to a further letter from the Ambassador a meeting with relevant officials was suggested to discuss the matter further.

Turkey

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Turkish Government regarding the case of Fatima Pollattas and Ceven Salmanoglu and their colleagues. [156541]

Mr. Vaz [holding answer 3 April 2001]: We are very concerned about the case of Ms Pollattas, Mr. Salmanoglu and others. Our Embassy in Ankara raised this case most recently on 23 March with the Turkish Ministry of Foreign Affairs. Our Consulate-General in Istanbul attended the first hearing on 21 March. We will continue to monitor developments in this case.

Biological Weapons Convention

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to attend the negotiations in Geneva on a protocol to strengthen the Biological Weapons Convention. [156968]

Mr. Wilson: A total of seven weeks of meetings are scheduled for the rest of this year in Geneva on a Protocol to strengthen the Biological Weapons Convention (BWC). The Protocol is an important arms control objective for the Untied Kingdom and Foreign Office Ministers have already addressed the BWC ad hoc group on two separate occasions to stress the need for a successful outcome to the negotiations. We are currently assessing the contents of the draft Protocol which was tabled by the Chair of the BWC ad hoc group (Ambassador Toth, Hungary) on 30 March, and also await first reactions for the other countries involved. We welcome the appearance of the text at this stage of the negotiations. We will consider ministerial attendance as negotiations proceed.

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the status of the negotiations with the ad hoc group in Geneva for a protocol to strengthen the Biological Weapons Convention. [157114]

Mr. Wilson: On 30 March the Chairman of the Biological Weapons Convention (BWC) ad hoc group, Ambassador Tibor Toth of Hungary, tabled the text of a draft Protocol to the BWC. This has been sent to all States Parties and will come under discussion at the next negotiating session which begins in Geneva on 23 April. The UK has played a leading role throughout these negotiations as we have had responsibility for the section of the text on compliance measures—the core of the future Protocol. We welcome the appearance of the text and are currently assessing this overall content. A successful outcome by the time of the BWC Review Conference remains a possibility but will depend upon the reaction to the text from all countries involved over the coming months. An effective BWC Protocol remains an important arms control objective for the United Kingdom as it will help fill the last remaining gap in Treaty provisions designed to stem the proliferation of WMD.

Panikos Tsiakourmas

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions he has had regarding the case of Mr. Panikos Tsiakourmas of Cyprus; and if he will make a statement. [157031]

Mr. Vaz: We remain deeply concerned about the continued detention of Mr. Tsiakourmas. During my visit to Cyprus on 14 March, I raised the issue with Mr. Denktash, and urged him to find a satisfactory resolution to the case. I also met Mrs. Tsiakourmas and reassured her that we would remain strongly engaged in seeking Mr. Tsiakourmas' release.

Libya

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the progress of negotiations with Libya. [156906]

Mr. Battle: The UK and US began talks with Libya in New York at the beginning of February. These trilateral talks are focused on how Libya can comply with the requirements of the UNSCRs: no more, no less. The trilateral talks are supported by bilateral talks in London and Tripoli.

Foot and Mouth (Tourism)

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what measures diplomatic posts are taking to ensure that potential foreign visitors are aware of tourism opportunities in the United Kingdom. [156979]

Mr. Wilson: Diplomatic Posts work closely with the British Tourist Authority overseas to promote the UK as a tourist destination. Since the outbreak of foot and mouth disease earlier this year posts have been implementing a pro-active public diplomacy campaign to provide the most up to date facts about how the UK is handling the disease.

At the Prime Minister's request posts have also redoubled their efforts to promote the message that Britain is open for business. This has included updating websites, placing articles, giving interviews and rebutting false allegations. The target audience for this activity has included the media, the travel industry and the local business community. Here we have held regular briefings for London-based foreign correspondents and have used the FCO's dedicated TV and radio services to feed stories into thousands of broadcasts around the world.

Palestine

Mr. Stephen Twigg: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to Yasser Arafat regarding the release from prison of members of (a) Hamas and (b) Islamic Jihad. [156907]

Mr. Wilson: The Secretary of State raised concerns about the release of prisoners belonging to groups responsible for terrorist acts during his meeting with President Arafat on 11 October 2000.

The Government are in regular contact with the Palestinian Authority and the Government of Israel, and urge them to resume security co-operation and to do all in their power to end violence, restrain extremism and minimise incitement and provocations.

Rapid Reaction Force

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 20 March 2001, Official Report, column 109W, on the Rapid Reaction Force, what obligations are waived for Denmark and applicable to the United Kingdom. [157403]

Mr. Vaz: Under Protocol 5 of the Treaty on European Union, Denmark does not participate in the elaboration and the implementation of decisions and actions of the Union which have defence implications and is not obliged to contribute to the financing of operational expenditure arising from such measures. The UK participates fully in the development of the European Security and Defence Policy.

China

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action the United Kingdom proposes to take in (a) London and (b) Geneva, to encourage UN Commission for Human Rights members to vote against the no-action motion China will propose at the 57 UNCHR. [157451]

Mr. Battle: EU Foreign Ministers agreed at the General Affairs Council on 19 March that the EU should oppose and actively lobby against any no-action motion tabled by China at the 57th session of the UN Commission on Human Rights.

Lobbying in Geneva and the capitals of some UNCHR member states has already been carried out on behalf of EU member states, including the United Kingdom, by the Swedish Presidency. This will continue until the vote, which is expected to take place on 18 April.

Brigadier Stephen Saunders

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the investigation into the murder of Brigadier Stephen Saunders, former defence attaché to Greece. [157597]

Mr. Battle: A team of Metropolitan police officers continues to work closely with the Hellenic National police in Athens on the investigation into the murder of Brigadier Saunders. Operational details of the investigation must remain confidential but we, and the Greek Government, remain committed to bringing Brigadier Saunders' murderers to justice.

Belize

Mr. Peter Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 29 March 2001, Official Report, column 746W, what information the British High Commission has received from (a) Belize Telecommunications, (b) its representatives as to the steps it intends to take either to (i) pursue its claims and (ii) to resolve the dispute; and if he will make a statement. [157959]

Mr. Battle: This issue is now in the hands of the Belize Public Utilities Commission and the Belizean Government. We hope that it will soon be resolved.

EU Newsletter

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what the cost of the (a) publication and (b) distribution of the spring 2001 EU Newsletter was; how many copies were published; and to whom it was distributed. [157763]

Mr. Vaz: The production costs came to £3,896.00 for 10,000 copies. Due to the use of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office internal post system for the distribution of many copies, we estimate that postage fees totalled less than £100.00.

Recipients included UK MEPs, MPs, British Embassies in the EU, UK Universities, Local Government Authorities and the European Commission Representation in the UK for onward transmission to public libraries and European Information Centres.

Keith Vaz

Mr. Stephen O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 16 March 2001, Official Report, column 776W? if, in his discussions with the hon. Member for Leicester, East (Mr. Vaz), he asked the hon. Member if he had sought to ensure the co-operation of witnesses in respect of each of the complaints in relation to which the Parliamentary Commissioner reported she had not completed her inquiry. [157564]

Mr. Robin Cook [holding answer 9 April 2001]: As was clear from the previous reply, the discussion referred to took place after the publication of the report of the Committee on Standards and Privileges and after the Commissioner had brought her inquiries to a conclusion.

Kyoto Agreement

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action is being taken by Her Majesty's Government and other European Governments to bring the United States back into the Kyoto Agreement. [157861]

Mr. Battle: The UK has raised climate change and the importance of the Kyoto Protocol at the highest levels in the US Administration. Our EU partners have also taken steps to persuade the Americans to remain in the Kyoto process; there have been bilateral contacts as well as a visit by the Environment Minister of Sweden, the Environment Commissioner and senior Belgian officials to Washington last week.

Over the period of the recently-launched US review of climate policy and in the run up the resumed international negotiations on the Kyoto Protocol in Bonn in July, the Government will continue strongly to urge full US participation in the international efforts to tackle climate change.

Ministerial Visits (Balkans)

Mr. Duncan Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on what dates he has visited (a) Croatia and (b) Bosnia-Herzegovina since January 2000. [157978]

Mr. Vaz: The Foreign Secretary has visited Croatia twice since January 2000: on 13 March 2000, meeting President Mesic and Prime Minister Racan, and on 23–24 November 2000 to attend the Zagreb Summit. I visited Croatia in February 2000. The Secretary of State last visited Bosnia in March 1998.

Human Rights (China)

Mr. Wilkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the objectives of the human rights dialogue between the United Kingdom and the People's Republic of China and the criteria he has established for the evaluation of its success. [157528]

Mr. Battle: HMG's overall objective in pursuing a structured human rights dialogue with China is to promote the highest possible adherence by China to existing international standards on human rights. While the specific objectives of each round of dialogue reflect issues of particular interest or concern at that time, the strategic direction of the dialogue process remains constant. To that end, the dialogue is accompanied by a comprehensive programme of technical advice and assistance on specific areas which give rise to human rights concerns.

In taking forward our dialogue with the Chinese Government, we are guided inter alia by the objectives agreed by the EU General Affairs Council on 22 January for the EU's own dialogue with China. These are:

ratification and implementation of the International Covenants on Civil and Political Rights and on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights;

co-operation with human rights mechanisms (visit by the UN Rapporteur on Torture, invitation to other Rapporteurs, follow-up to recommendations from conventional mechanisms and recommendations by Rapporteurs, implementation of the agreement with the Office of the UN High Commissioner for Human Rights); in the context of seeking the universal abolition of capital punishment including in China, as a first step to promoting compliance with ECOSOC guarantees for the protection of those sentenced to death and restriction of the cases in which the death penalty can be imposed, in keeping with Article 6 of the Covenant on Civil and Political Rights; provision of statistics on use of the death penalty; reform of administrative detention; introduction of judicial supervision of procedures; respect for the right to a fair and impartial trial and for the rights of the defence; respect for the fundamental rights of all prisoners, including those arrested for membership of the political opposition, unofficial religious movements or other movements; progress on access to prisoners in Chinese prisons, including in the autonomous regions; constructive response to individual cases raised by the EU; exercise of freedom of religion and belief, both public and private;

respect for the right to organise;

respect for cultural rights and religious freedoms in particular in Tibet and Xinjiang, halt to the "patriotic education" campaign in Tibet, access for an independent delegation, acceptable to both sides, to visit Gedhun Choekyi Nyima, the child designated by the Dalai Lama as 11th Panchen Lama.

In addition, the UK's approach to the last two rounds of the dialogue with China was aimed at:

the end to jamming of the BBC World Service broadcasts; freedom of expression and freedom of the press.

We will carry out regular reviews of the dialogue process, which will include an assessment of progress achieved on these objectives.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Departmental Policies (Lincoln)

Gillian Merron: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will set out, with statistical information relating as directly as possible to the Lincoln constituency, the effects on Lincoln of his Department's policies and actions since 2 May 1997. [152982]

Mr. Chris Smith [holding answer 20 March 2001]: Since May 1997, my Department has introduced and developed a variety of initiatives which will impact on my hon. Friend's constituency which promote our objectives of access, excellence, education, and creativity and employment. We have published our strategies to take this forward in "Tomorrow's Tourism" and "A Sporting Future for All", which was recently followed up by "The Government's Plan for Sport". We have tackled the issue of social inclusion taking forward the recommendations of Policy Action Team 10 on Arts and Sport and developing social inclusion policies across all our areas which is recognised within the most recent progress report "Building on PAT10".

We have given more support to the cultural and sporting infrastructure. The Spending Review 2000 secured a doubling of the budget for sport and the largest ever increase for the arts: an increase of 80 per cent. from £186 million in 1997–98 to £336 million in 2003–04. In taking forward our aim to develop the educational potential of culture and sport £40 million has been allocated to developing Creative Partnerships; we have established through lottery funding, the £30 million National Foundation for Youth Music; and secured an additional £130 million for primary schools sports and arts facilities through the Space for Sport and the Arts programme. With £120 million of central Government and Lottery funding we will be providing a school sports co-ordinator in one in four secondary schools to work with local primary and special schools to improve sporting provision and physical education for children in the most deprived areas. We have delivered free access to national museums for children and the over 60s and additional money will be provided to allow this to be extended to everyone in December 2001. We have commissioned a taskforce which is currently considering the issues facing non-national museums in the regions.

We have made improvements in the way the Lottery is spent to ensure a fairer distribution. The introduction of the New Opportunities Fund for spending on health, education and the environment has made a real difference to communities everywhere. For instance it has invested £120 million to support the People's Network, which will enable all 4,300 public libraries to offer free public Internet access through UK on-line learning centres; and a further £50 million to stimulate development of content to support the Network.

We have set up a Regional Cultural Consortium in each of the English regions outside London to champion culture and creativity, including heritage, sport and tourism, and to draw up regional cultural strategies identifying regional objectives and priorities.

We have published a Green Paper "Culture and Creativity: The Next Ten Years", setting out how individual creative talent can be given the support it needs from childhood to flourish; how artists and cultural institutions can be freed from bureaucratic controls; and how the freedom to explore and enjoy creativity and culture can be made available to all.

Through their commitment to public service broadcasting, the Government have helped to foster an environment in which a creative, commercially successful broadcasting industry provides a wide range of UK-made, high quality, original programmes catering for all viewers and listeners. We have ensured a secure funding base for the BBC and S4C, while giving them the freedom to develop commercial operations which complement and support their public service remit. We have made clear in the Communications White Paper that public service broadcasting will continue to have a key role to play in the digital future. The Government have introduced free television licences for people aged 75 or over from 1 November last year.

My Department sponsors the British Tourist Authority (BTA) which continues to promote Britain effectively as an attractive tourist destination for overseas visitors. The BTA's successful marketing activities are aimed at bringing benefits to all parts of the UK, including Lincoln.

In delivering these initiatives we aim to make cultural and sporting activities inclusive ones, boosting participation and improving the quality of life for all.

Lincoln

According to the information supplied to us by the distributing bodies for the national lottery awards database, there have been 98 national lottery awards to Lincoln, totalling £9,064,778.

Ten Millennium Award Winners have been identified from Lincoln and between them they have received grants totalling £29,400.

Information on the number of beneficiaries of free television licences by constituency is not available, but estimates based on the 1991 Census indicate that there were approximately 5,900 people aged 75 or over living in the Lincoln constituency.

Heritage Economic Regeneration Scheme 1999–2000 and 2000–01 total of £200,000 offered.

There are of course other initiatives in the wider context of the region which may have an effect on the Lincoln constituency. These are:

East Midlands Arts Board received £6,853,000 in 2000–01 from the Arts Council to support arts and cultural activity across its region. In 2001–02 this will increase to £7,771,701 or by 12.4 per cent.

The National Foundation for Youth Music are currently considering bids for Lincoln but they have not been confirmed as yet.

My Department has also given support to Supporters Direct, who have been instrumental in assisting the formation of the Supporters' Trust that has recently taken over the ownership of Lincoln City Football Club.

Departmental Policies (Chichester)

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will set out, with statistical information relating as directly as possible to the Chichester constituency, the effects on Chichester of his Department's policies and actions since 2 May 1997. [155280]

Mr. Chris Smith: Since May 1997 my Department has introduced and developed a variety of initiatives which will impact on the constituency of Chichester which promote our objectives of access, excellence, education and creativity and employment. We have published our strategies to take this forward in "Tomorrow's Tourism" and "A Sporting Future for All", which was recently followed up by "The Government's Plan for Sport". We have tackled the issue of social inclusion taking forward the recommendations of Policy Action Team 10 on Arts and Sport and developing social inclusion policies across all our areas which is recognised within the most recent progress report "Building on PAT10".

We have given more support to the cultural and sporting infrastructure. The Spending Review 2000 secured a doubling of the budget for sport and the largest ever increase for the arts: an increase of 80 per cent. from £186 million in 1997–98 to £336 million in 2003–04. In taking forward our aim to develop the educational potential of culture and sport £40 million has been allocated to developing Creative Partnerships; we have established through lottery funding, the £30 million National Foundation for Youth Music; and secured an additional £130 million for primary schools sports and arts facilities through the Space for Sport and the Arts programme. With £120 million of central Government and Lottery funding we will be providing a school sports co-ordinator in one in four secondary schools to work with local primary and special schools to improve sporting provision and physical education for children in the most deprived areas. We have delivered free access to national museums for children and the over 60s and additional money will be provided to allow this to be extended to everyone in December 2001. We have commissioned a taskforce which is currently considering the issues facing non-national museums in the regions.

We have made improvements in the way the Lottery is spent to ensure a fairer distribution. The introduction of the New Opportunities Fund for spending on health, education and the environment has made a real difference to communities everywhere. For instance it has invested £120 million to support the People's Network, which will enable all 4,300 public libraries to offer free public internet access through UK online learning centres; and a further £50 million to stimulate development of content to support the Network.

We have set up a Regional Cultural Consortium in each of the English regions outside London to champion culture and creativity, including heritage, sport and tourism, and to draw up regional cultural strategies identifying regional objectives and priorities.

We have published a Green Paper "Culture and Creativity: The Next Ten Years", setting out how individual creative talent can be given the support it needs from childhood to flourish; how artists and cultural institutions can be freed from bureaucratic controls; and how the freedom to explore and enjoy creativity and culture can be made available to all.

Through their commitment to public service broadcasting, the Government have helped to foster an environment in which a creative, commercially successful broadcasting industry provides a wide range of UK-made, high quality, original programmes catering for all viewers and listeners. We have ensured a secure funding base for the BBC and S4C, while giving them the freedom to develop commercial operations which complement and support their public service remit. We have made clear in the Communications White Paper that public service broadcasting will continue to have a key role to play in the digital future. The Government have introduced free television licences for people aged 75 or over from 1 November last year.

My Department sponsors the British Tourist Authority (BTA) which continues to promote Britain effectively as an attractive tourist destination for overseas visitors. The BTA's successful marketing activities are aimed at bringing benefits to all parts of the UK, including Chichester.

In delivering these initiatives we aim to make cultural and sporting activities inclusive ones, boosting participation and improving the quality of life for all.

There are of course other initiatives in the wider context of West Sussex which may have an effect on the Chichester constituency. These are:

West Sussex Library Authority, which includes the Chichester constituency, was a partner in a consortium which received an award of £145,138 from the DCMS/Wolfson Public Libraries Challenge Fund in 1998–99.

South East Arts received £4,046,000 in 2000–01 from the Arts Council to support arts and cultural activity across its region. In 2001–02 this will increase to £4,847,711 or by 19.8 per cent.

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will set out, with statistical information relating as directly as possible to the London borough of Southwark, the effects on the London borough of Southwark of his Department's policies and actions since May 2 1997. [155981]

Mr. Chris Smith [holding answer 2 April 2001]: Since May 1997 my Department has introduced and developed a variety of initiatives which will impact on my right hon. We have established the Greater London Authority and an elected Mayor for London. The Mayor now has responsibility for most aspects of culture in London and has appointed a Cultural Strategy Group to advise him and to draw up a cultural strategy for London.

We have published a Green Paper "Culture and Creativity: The Next Ten Years", setting out how individual creative talent can be given the support it needs from childhood to flourish; how artists and cultural institutions can be freed from bureaucratic controls; and how the freedom to explore and enjoy creativity and culture can be made available to all.

Tobacco Sponsorship

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what help has been given to those sports which have relied on tobacco sponsorship; and if he will make a statement. [157315]

Kate Hoey [holding answer 6 April 2001]: Over the past two years, there has been extensive contact with the seven sports that sought assistance to make the transition from tobacco sponsorship. The taskforce of business and sponsorship has been there to make information available, offer advice to support the development of new marketing strategies, make initial contact with potential sponsors and offer professional advice on how the sports can start to position themselves in a changing marketplace.

The taskforce has now concluded the first phase of its work to identify the needs of the sports and ascertain how best it can assist them. Assistance with the replacement of existing contracts can most effectively be targeted in the 12 to 18 months before they lapse, which is the normal lead-in time for negotiating new sponsorship agreements.

I am in close touch with the seven sports affected and the taskforce has made clear to them that its assistance is still available as and when they require it.

The "Hanover"

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport (1) if the Advisory Committee on historic wreck sites was consulted about the length of the licence granted to excavate the wreck site of the "Hanover"; and if he will make a statement; [157425]

(2) for what reason the licence to excavate the wreck site of the "Hanover" is without a specific time limit; and if he will make a statement. [157426]

Mr. Alan Howarth: In July 1997 the "Hanover" wreck site was the subject of an emergency designation under the Protection of Wrecks Act 1973. Mr. Colin Martin, who was working on the site at the time, immediately applied for leave for judicial review of the Designation Order. The terms of the licence were agreed as part of the settlement of the action. The Advisory Committee on Historic Wreck Sites was not formally consulted on the terms of the licence but they were kept informed of developments throughout. Decisions on the granting of licences are for the Secretary of State to make, consulting as he sees appropriate. There is no set time limit for licences granted under the Protection of Wrecks Act.

Listed Buildings (Liverpool)

Mrs. Ellman: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will list the listed buildings there are in (a) the City of Liverpool and (b) Riverside constituency; and how much funding has been allocated to them to assist conservation in the last three years. [157432]

Mr. Alan Howarth: Statistics are not available for these geographical areas, but there are 3,125 listed buildings on Merseyside. The list can be consulted at the Department for Culture, Media and Sport, at Liverpool City Council or at the National Monuments Record Centre in Swindon. Over the last three years, buildings in Liverpool have attracted conservation grants from the Heritage Lottery Fund (HLF) and English Heritage totalling £43.4 million, of which £42.8 million was for buildings in Liverpool Riverside. These figures include a grant of £26.7 million from the HLF for development and refurbishment of the Liverpool Museum and Walker Art Gallery.

Royal Opera House

Mr. Efford: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport (1) what discussions he has had with the Royal Opera House regarding its concessionary ticketing policy; and if he will make a statement; [157534]

(2) what discussions he has had with the Royal Opera House regarding the availability of standby tickets; and how many performances since the Royal Opera House reopened there have been for which standing tickets were available. [157535]

Mr. Alan Howarth: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State and I have discussions from time to time with the Chairman and management of the Royal Opera House to ensure that Covent Garden is open to a broader audience and for the public to have the widest possible access to performances.

The Royal Opera House currently offers a number of concessionary and standby rates. These include:

For performances in the main auditorium where standby tickets have been made available on the day of performance, senior citizens, students, under 18s, those in receipt of Job Seeker's Allowance or Invalid Care Allowance, members of BECTU, MU, Equity, Incorporated Society of Musicians, the Friends of Covent Garden and Stage Pass, holders of a City of Westminster ResCard and residents of London WC2 postal area can buy one reduced-price ticket per person from the Box Office. Stand-by tickets for the best available seat are £12.50 for ballet and £15 for opera performances and, when available, will be released for sale four hours before curtain-up.

Customers with disabilities who join the free Royal Opera House Access List receive a 50 per cent. discount on tickets for themselves and a companion.

Senior citizens, students, under 18s and those in receipt of Job Seeker's Allowance receive a £1 discount off the ticket price of Backstage Tours.

Standing tickets are available at all performances of ballet and opera in the main auditorium.

Outside companies using the Linbury Studio Theatre or the Clore Studio Upstairs must honour the existing concessionary schemes.

Each season, at least two productions of opera will be relayed into the Covent Garden piazza free of charge.

The Royal Opera House companies continue to attract a large and varied audience for their work. In the first season after re-opening the House achieved over 90 per cent. capacity for performances of opera and ballet with ticket prices reduced in many areas. A broad and innovative programme of education work has involved over 100,000 school children as well as young people and adults from all backgrounds. I commend the board and management of the House for their commitment to making the Royal Opera House accessible to the widest possible audience.

Mr. Colman: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport when he will reopen Richmond Park to vehicular traffic. [157764]

Mr. Chris Smith: Discussions are under way between the relevant bodies, including the Royal Parks Agency and Historic Royal Palaces. I am hopeful that an announcement about the re-opening of Richmond Park, Bushy Park and the Home Park at Hampton Court will be made in the next few days.

Regional Arts Boards

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will initiate consultations upon the proposals made by the Arts Council of England to wind up the regional arts boards prior to their implementation; and if he will make a statement. [157988]

Mr. Alan Howarth: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State was consulted personally by the Chairman and the Chief Executive of the Arts Council prior to the announcement of the proposed changes, and the Department for the Environment, Transport and the Regions was also informed. The development of the proposals will involve further consultation with colleagues and stakeholders, and the views of the Regional Arts Boards themselves are being sought and will be considered closely.

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will list the international visits her Department has undertaken in connection with fish genetics programmes. [157277]

Clare Short: Staff in my Department participated in a workshop on "Practical Strategies for Poverty Targeted Research" which took place in Hanoi in November 2000.

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development (1) if she will list the members of the Aquaculture Research Programme, indicating their (a) scientific qualifications and (b) commercial interests; [157272]

Clare Short: The information requested is available in the Bibliography of DFID fisheries research programmes, 1990–98.

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will list the commercial partners involved in her Department's programmes working on GM fish stocks (a) in the UK and (b) internationally. [157278]

Clare Short: There are no UK or international commercial partners involved in our programme on GM fish stock which is entirely funded by my Department.

Debt Cancellation

Ms Julie Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will urge other countries to adopt a policy of 100 per cent. debt cancellation to the heavily indebted poor countries at the next meeting of the World bank. [157536]

Clare Short: I am pleased that a number of countries are following the UK's lead in providing additional relief on their remaining bilateral debts for Heavily Indebted Poor Countries (HIPC).

We will continue to take every opportunity to encourage others to follow the UK's example, including at the spring meetings of the World Bank and IMF.

Palestinian National Authority

Mr. Stephen Twigg: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make further aid to the Palestinian National Authority conditional on a reduction in corruption; and if she will make a statement. [156897]

Clare Short: All UK aid is provided in a way which is well protected against corruption.

The people of the West Bank and Gaza are suffering badly from the effects of the current conflict and the economic sanctions imposed by Israel. We will continue to provide help to reduce poverty and support democratic and accountable government in the West Bank and Gaza.

SCOTLAND

Postal Services

Mr. Alexander: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps are being taken to improve postal services in Scotland; and if he will make a statement. [153579]

Mr. Foulkes: The Horizon project to computerise all post office systems is nearing completion. This will mean that all customers, regardless of location, will now have access to the same high technology and top quality service. Ring fenced support has been allocated over the next three years to implement recommendations in the Performance and Innovation Unit report on modernisation of the Post Office network.

The Government fully recognise the pivotal role which the Post Office plays in communities across Scotland. A new £2 million UK wide fund, which is available for the 2001–02 financial year to support initiatives to maintain or re-open post office facilities in areas where the traditional post office is closing, will help to strengthen the rural post office network in Scotland. All of these initiatives will ensure that we can build a post office network which goes from strength to strength.

Departmental Policies (Edinburgh, South)

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if she will set out, with statistical information relating as directly as possible to the Edinburgh, South constituency, the effects on Edinburgh of the Department's policies and actions in health, education and other services since 2 May 1997. [155338]

Mr. Foulkes [holding answer 26 March 2001]: On health, a range of policies have been adopted since May 1997 to improve the NHS in Scotland. These measures include, for example, the abolition of the internal market and the commitment to substantial increases in expenditure on the NHS. All areas of Scotland, including Edinburgh and Edinburgh, South, benefit from these policies.

On education, between 1997 and 1999 there was a 10 per cent. reduction (from 63 to 57) in the number of primary school classes in Edinburgh, South with more than 30 pupils. Between 1996 and 1999, the number of teachers (full-time equivalent) employed in Edinburgh, South rose by 15 in primaries and by 12 in secondaries. The pupil-teacher ratio dropped from 21.5 to 19.7 in primaries and from 13.3 to 13.0 in secondaries over this period.

Between 1996 and 1999, the percentage of the S4 school roll gaining five or more Standard Grades at levels 1–4 in secondary schools in Edinburgh, South rose from around 61 per cent. to around 74 per cent.

Early in 1999, the City of Edinburgh council was awarded funding of £600,000 over three years for a New Community schools project under phase 1 of the pilot programme. Four primary schools in Edinburgh, South are included in the project (Fernieside, Gilmerton, Moredun and St. John Vianney RC).

Also early in 1999, the City of Edinburgh council was awarded £1.5 million over three years to implement an Education Action Plan to improve attainment in schools facing particular challenges. Two secondary schools in Edinburgh, South are covered by the Education Action Plan (Gracemount and Liberton High Schools).

Additional capital resources of £0.6 million in 1997–98 and £1.7 million in 1998–99 and 1999–00 were made available to the City of Edinburgh council under the New Deal for Schools for repairs to school buildings across the council's area.

The recurrent grant in aid allocations to the three Edinburgh Further Education colleges rose from £30.762 million for financial year 1997–98 by 9.9 per cent. to £33.812 million for financial year 1999–2000.

Since 1 July 1999, health and education have been mainly devolved matters for the Scottish Parliament and the Scottish Executive.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Capital Modernisation Fund

Maria Eagle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the impact of the Capital Modernisation Fund on his Department. [158176]

Mr. Straw: Modernising the criminal justice system is a cornerstone of effective crime fighting and in reducing the fear of crime. Capital Modernisation Fund investment in innovative Departmental programmes is ensuring that crimes are detected, offenders prosecuted, and victims supported more quickly, effectively and efficiently.

The Home Office has benefited from over £220 million investment from Round 1 of the Capital Modernisation Fund, including £150 million funding for a joint project with the Department for the Environment Transport and the Regions to reduce vehicle crime and improve security on housing estates.

It has also benefited from over £162 million investment from Round 2 of the Capital Modernisation Fund, including £25 million for the National Technical Assistance Centre to assist law enforcement agencies' ability to fight crime in the information age.

£4 million investment has already been secured from Round 3 of the Capital Modernisation Fund for the development by the Youth Justice Board of two small mother and baby units for girls under 18 which will enable sentenced or remanded young mothers to remain with their young babies where appropriate. The first unit should open by early 2003. A further £18 million has been secured to fund the capital costs of the Youth Justice Board's expansion of the secure juvenile estate.

I intend to announce details of further allocations to my Department from Round 3 of the Capital Modernisation Fund bidding process shortly.

Corruption White Paper

Mr. Pond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the Government's response to comments on the White Paper, "Raising Standards and Upholding Integrity: the Prevention of Corruption" (CM 4759). [158179]

Mr. Straw: The main proposals in the White Paper were to reform the law of corruption in the light of recommendations made by the Law Commission; to put beyond doubt that the crime of corrupting public officials extends to foreign public officials; to introduce a new offence of 'trading in influence'; and to take jurisdiction over United Kingdom nationals who commit bribery offences abroad.

We received six comments on the White Paper, most of which were broadly favourable to our main proposals. The main points made by commentators, and the Government's reaction to them, are contained in a paper which I have today placed in the Library.

I have decided to make two changes to the scheme set out in the White Paper in the light of comments received. Firstly, the legislation will include proposals for a new offence of 'trading in influence' which will apply to both the public and the private sectors. As the extension of the offence to the private sector is a new proposal I shall listen most carefully to the arguments on both sides when the Bill comes before the House. Secondly, the legislation will extend not only to England and Wales but to Northern Ireland as well.

I will bring forward legislation to implement the proposals at the earliest opportunity.

Asylum and Immigration Act

Mr. Miller: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to ensure that employers do not unlawfully discriminate when using the statutory defence against prosecution under section 8 of the Asylum and Immigration Act 1996. [158180]

Mrs. Roche: Section 8 of the Asylum and Immigration Act 1996 ("the 1996 Act") allows for the prosecution of employers who knowingly employ individuals without permission to work in the United Kingdom. A statutory defence against prosecution is available which requires that the employer obtain a copy of a document showing that the individual is entitled to take work.

There were concerns that, in seeking to avail themselves of this defence, employers were unlawfully discriminating by making more checks on job applicants than the defence in Section 8 requires or by targeting checks on racial grounds. That is why we undertook, in the Immigration and Asylum Act 1999, to issue a Code of Practice to employers on how to avoid racial discrimination when seeking to apply the defence.

In the light of that commitment the Government have prepared a Code of Practice that sets out the responsibilities of employers under the Race Relations Act 1976 and the 1996 Act and describes how employers can use the statutory defence in a way that avoids racial discrimination. In preparing the draft Code of Practice and summary, we consulted the Commission for Racial Equality, the Equality Commission for Northern Ireland and a number of other organisations.

We propose that this Code of Practice should come into force on 2 May. We plan to distribute copies to interested organisations, together with a summary, which should ensure that all employers can easily understand their responsibilities in avoiding racial discrimination. A copy of the code of practice has been placed in the Library.

Immigration Services

Mr. Plaskitt: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the regulation of immigration advisers and immigration services providers. [158181]

Mrs. Roche: I announced on 6 March 2001, Official Report, column 121W, that the scheme for regulating immigration advisers under part V of the Immigration and Asylum Act 1999 would be brought into force on 30 April 2001. I have now signed a commencement order to that effect. From that date, it will be a criminal offence to provide immigration advice or immigration services in the course of a business in breach of the requirements of the Act.

It has never been the Government's intention that Members of Parliament should be subject to the regulatory scheme. Our advice is that Members of both Houses of Parliament, Members of the European Parliament, Members of the devolved legislatures, local councillors, and their staff, are not subject to the regulatory scheme when providing immigration advice or services in connection with their parliamentary and constituency duties. Immigration advice and services given in other circumstances, however, may be subject to the scheme.

I have also signed two exemption orders under section 84 (4)(d) of the Act, which will come into effect on 30 April 2001.

The Immigration and Asylum Act 1999 (part V exemption: educational institutions and health sector bodies) Order 2001 will exempt certain educational establishments and a number of public sector health bodies from the prohibition on giving immigration advice or services unless qualified. While there are some small differences between various parts of the United Kingdom, the main bodies exempted under the order are:

Universities, colleges and other bodies authorised to award degrees

Colleges of further education

Finally registered independent schools

The students' unions of all such bodies, as above

National Heath Service Health Authorities, Trusts and Boards.

The Immigration and Asylum Act 1999 (part V exemption: eligible voluntary bodies and relevant employers) Order 2001 will give a temporary exemption from the prohibition until the end of January 2002 to:

voluntary bodies which, by 30 April 2001, have provided the Legal Services Commission with written confirmation of their firm intention to apply for the Community Legal Service Quality Mark (ie. have committed themselves to apply for the Quality Mark) employers and prospective employers of work permit holders.

Although these orders exempt the bodies concerned from the general prohibition on giving immigration advice and services and the associated criminal sanctions for breaching the prohibition, the exempted organisations, nevertheless, have to comply with the Code of Standards published by the Immigration Services Commissioner.

Home Detention Curfews

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list, for the period between the commencement of the Home Detention Curfew scheme and 31 March inclusive (a) the number of prisoners released on the scheme, (b) the number of prisoners convicted of each offence who were released on the scheme, with a breakdown of the offences committed, including offences committed by prisoners normally classified under the categories (i) other homicide and attempted homicide, (ii) other violence against the person, (iii) drug offences, (iv) assaults and (v) other offences, including a breakdown of the prisoners normally classified in the sub-category of other offences called other offences, (c) the average sentence (i) received and (ii) served, and the average period spent on the scheme, in respect of each offence, (d) the number of prisoners released on the scheme, with a breakdown of the offences committed who (i) breached the conditions of the curfew, (ii) disappeared and were recaptured, (iii) disappeared and remain unlawfully at large and (iv) had their licences revoked with reasons, (e) a breakdown of the offences committed by prisoners released on the scheme while on the scheme, including offences committed by prisoners who committed more than one offence and (f) a breakdown of the specific offences committed by prisoners released on the scheme who committed a further offence while on the scheme that was similar in character to that for which they were originally convicted, including offences committed by prisoners who committed more than one offence; and if he will make a statement. [157979]

Mr. Boateng: I will write to the hon. Member.

Electoral Register

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer to the right hon. Member for Maidstone and The Weald (Miss Widdecombe), of 11 December 2000, Official Report, column 59W, on the Political Parties, Elections and Referendums Act 2000, when it is proposed that on-line access to the electoral register will be provided to registered political parties and the Electoral Commission to enable them to fulfil the requirements of Part IV of the Political Parties, Elections and Referendums Act 2000; and if he will make a statement about the progress being made in providing such access. [158035]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The project to provide such access has begun and bids to undertake the work have been invited. But it will take time to set up the necessary management mechanisms and put in place the technical requirements. We expect access to be available by 2003.

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what action he is taking to ensure that registered political parties and the Electoral Commission are provided with updates of the electoral register to enable them to fulfil the requirements of Part IV of the Political Parties, Elections and Referendums Act 2000; [158005]

(2) pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Birmingham, Hall Green (Mr. McCabe) of 26 March 2001, Official Report, column 496W, and to the oral statement of 4 April 2001, Official Report, column 422, on updates of the electoral register, when he will publish amendments to paragraph 47 of the Representation of the People (England and Wales) Regulations 2001 to provide for registered political parties and the Electoral Commission to receive copies of updates of the electoral register; when he proposes that the amendments will come into force; and in what form the updates will be provided; [157984]

(3) pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Birmingham, Hall Green (Mr. McCabe) of 26 March 2001, Official Report, column 496W, and to the oral statement of 4 April 2001, Official Report, column 422, on updates of the electoral register, if he will instruct electoral registration officers to provide registered political parties and the Electoral Commission with updates of the electoral register to enable them to fulfil the requirements of Part IV of the Political Parties, Elections and Referendums Act 2000. [157985]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: We hope to publish, for consultation, draft regulations making further provision for the sale and supply of the electoral register towards the end of April. Subject to parliamentary approval, we anticipate that the regulations providing for the supply of updates of the full electoral register to registered political parties will come into force by the summer recess. The regulations will provide for updates to be supplied in data format unless the recipient requests otherwise.

In the meantime, it is open to registered political parties to request a copy of each new revised version of the register as it is published or to make other appropriate arrangements to check whether a donor is registered at the time his or her donation is received by the party.

As the supply of the register to registered parties is currently governed by regulation 47 of the Representation of the People (England and Wales) Regulations 2001, we cannot instruct electoral registration officers to undertake any actions that falls outwith that regulation.

The supply of the electoral register to the Electoral Commission is governed by regulation 46 of the 2001 Regulation. Regulation 46 already provides for the Commission to receive copies of lists of amendments to the published registers.

Firearms (Police)

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will place in the Library a copy of the ACPO manual of guidance on police use of firearms which immediately preceded that issued in January. [157878]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The previous manual of guidance was, and must remain, confidential, because it contained numerous points of information which could have been valuable to criminals. The guidance has now been revised and has been placed in the Library, although some information must remain confidential for the reasons stated.

Prisoner Activity

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the average amount of purposeful activity per week per prisoner in 2000–01; and if he will make a statement. [157982]

Mr. Boateng: The number of average weekly purposeful activity hours for the period April 2000 to the end of February 2001 was 23.7. The data for February included in these figures are provisional and subject to validation by prisons.

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the Audit Commission report, "Halfway Home: An Analysis of the Variation in the Cost of Supporting Asylum Seekers". [157981]

Mrs. Roche: Following the publication last year of the Audit Commission's Report, "Another Country" we requested that it undertake research into why some local authorities were able to live within the grant limits set for supporting asylum seekers, while others, in similar circumstances, could not. The report, "Half Way Home" is the result.

We welcome this report and the sensible recommendations it makes about the way local authorities are reimbursed for supporting asylum seekers. We will discuss with the Local Government Association and the Association of London Government the best way of taking this forward, with a view to implementing a new grant scheme for this (2001–02) financial year.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many and what percentage of asylum seekers from Zimbabwe who applied for asylum in (a) each of the last six months and (b) in total have received a positive initial decision on their application (i) in total and (ii) of those who have been sent to Oakington; and if he will make a statement. [157980]

Mrs. Roche: The number of asylum applications from nationals of Zimbabwe during the last six months is shown in the table.

Month	Asylum Applications[1,2]
September 2000	85
October 2000	90
November 2000	130
December 2000	145
January 2001	125
February 2001	125
Total	700

[1] Figures rounded to the nearest 5
[2] Provisional figures

The number of initial decisions relating to applications of asylum from Zimbabwean nationals between September 2000 and February 2001 is only available for applicants dealt with at Oakington—the monthly breakdown is shown in the table. Information on the other Zimbabwean applications made in that period could be obtained only by examination of individual case records and is, therefore, available only at disproportionate cost.

Month	Total Principal Applicants (Zimbabweans)	Number of Grants of Asylum	Percentage of Grants from Total
October 2000	54	0	0
November 2000	60	4	6.7
December 2000	59	0	0
January 2001	83	1	1.2
February 2001	89	2	2.2
Total	387	7	n/a

Mr. Ennis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many asylum seekers have been housed in (a) England, (b) Barnsley and (c) Doncaster in the last 12 months. [157298]

Mrs. Roche: As at the end of February 2001, 21,410[1] asylum seekers (including dependants) were allocated accommodation in the UK by the National Asylum Support Service. Of these, 110[1] were allocated accommodation in Barnsley and 400[1] were allocated accommodation in Doncaster.

Information on the number of asylum seekers supported by local authorities under the previous support arrangements is not held centrally.

[1] Figures rounded to the nearest 10.

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what limits he has placed on the period an asylum seeker can be held in prison. [157011]

Mrs. Roche: There is no time limit on the period an individual may be detained under the Immigration Act 1971. However, detention is used only sparingly and for the shortest period necessary.

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many reports the Immigration and Nationality Directorate have received of asylum seekers convicted of offences while in the United Kingdom since 1999; and if he will make a statement. [157529]

Mrs. Roche [holding answer 9 April 2001]: The Immigration and Nationality Directorate is not routinely informed of the immigration status of all third country nationals convicted of criminal offences in the United Kingdom. The number who were referred for court recommended deportation in 1999 was 350. In the first half of 2000, 320 persons were recommended for deportation by the courts. It is not recorded how many of these had claimed asylum.

Details of the nationality or immigration status of a defendant charged or convicted with committing a criminal offence are not collected centrally on the Home Office Court Proceedings Database.

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the cost of asylum support is, including unaccompanied minors (a) in the period 2000–01, (b) estimated for the current financial year 2001–02 and (c) estimated for the period 2002–03; and if he will make a statement. [157522]

Mrs. Roche [holding answer 9 April 2001]: Estimated expenditure on asylum support, including unaccompanied asylum seeking minors in 2000–01 is £751 million (estimated final outturn). This is made up of:

Grant payments to local authorities for Adult, Families and unaccompanied asylum seeking children—£575 million

Support payments by the National Asylum Support Service—£115 million

Payments to Department of Social Service (DSS) for supporting asylum seekers on benefit—£56 million

Payments to the Scottish Executive for support to adults and families who applied before April 2000—£5 million.

The budget of £702 million for 2000–01 was made up of an original sum of £604 million for asylum support costs together with transfers of £60 million from the Department of Health for the costs of unaccompanied asylum seeking children and £38 million from DSS for Housing Benefit costs. The additional £49 million expenditure was as a result of additional funds being provided to asylum support because of savings elsewhere in the Immigration and Nationality Directorate budget.

Provisional estimates for asylum support costs for 2001–02 and 2002–03 were given in my reply of 24 July 2000, Official Report, column 450W, to the hon. Member for Aylesbury (Mr. Lidington). This funding will be reviewed if needed.

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many asylum seekers are (a) supported by NASS under the new support arrangements, (b) supported by local authorities under the previous support arrangements and (c) unaccompanied minors; and if he will make a statement. [157523]

Mrs. Roche [holding answer 9 April 2001]: As at the end of February 2001, 11,630 asylum[1] seekers (including dependants) were allocated subsistence only support by the National Asylum Support Service (NASS) and 21,400[1,2] asylum seekers (including dependants) were allocated accommodation and subsistence support by NASS.

Information on the number of asylum seekers being supported by local authorities under the previous support arrangements is not held centrally.

As at the 26 January 2001 there were 5,540[1] unaccompanied minors being supported in England by local authorities. The figures for unaccompanied minors being supported in Scotland and Wales are not held centrally.

[1] All figures are rounded to the nearest 10.

[2] A very small proportion of these cases may be allocated accommodation support only.

Departmental Policies (Hampstead and Highgate)

Ms Glenda Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the effects, with statistical information, on Hampstead and Highgate of his Department's policies since 2 May 1997. [158015]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The Home Office is working to build a safe, just and tolerant society in which the rights and responsibilities of individuals, families and communities are properly balanced, and the protection and security of the public are maintained. Detailed information on the impact of Home Office policies across the full range of responsibilities is set out in Home Office Annual Reports. A copy of the most recent report, Home Office Annual Report 2000–01, is available in the Library. Information on recorded crime and policing is also published. 'Recorded Crime England and Wales, 12 months to September 2000' and 'Police Service Strength England and Wales, 30 September 2000' can be found in the Library. The recorded crime statistics include information on recorded crime by Basic Command Unit and Crime and Disorder partnerships.

The impact of Home Office policies and actions is not normally examined by constituency and the statistics which the Department collects, such as recorded crime, cannot be matched in the way requested although set out below are examples relating to the Hampstead and Highgate constituency or the immediate locality:

Closed Circuit Television (CCTV)

London Borough of Camden, in partnership with the Metropolitan Police, were awarded £598,000 for a scheme extending the existing Camden Town Centre system with 17 new cameras and provision of a centralised control room. The scheme will encompass three London Underground stations in Camden Town, Chalk Farm and Mornington Crescent.

Youth Offending

Hampstead and Highgate is covered by the Camden Youth Offending Team (YOT). Multi-agency partnerships have been strengthened through the establishment of YOTs, involving staff from Social Services, Education, Police, Probation and Health Departments. Seven Youth Justice Board (YJB) Development Grants have been awarded to Camden YOT and Youth Service. The local authority continues to allocate over £300,000 per annum in grants to voluntary organisations, the YOT and other departments to develop preventative initiatives. Links are being developed between the YOT and the local minority ethnic communities.

A youth inclusion programme has been established in Castlehaven Ward for over 50 young people most at risk of re-offending. This is being funded through YJB and local authority grants for 2 years. The YJB awarded Camden YOT £94,000 for 2000–01 to develop a range of new services including: substance misuse; new Referral Orders and accommodation advice and support. Conditional approval has been given by the YJB for a new Intensive Supervision and Surveillance Scheme (ISSP), between Camden, Islington, Hackney and Tower Hamlet YOTs, to prevent custody and reduce re-offending by the most persistent offenders. Camden YOT is involved with the Police, Housing and Youth Service in response to anti-social behaviour and other local crime issues.

Camden is on course to achieve the multi-agency target of a 15 per cent. reduction in youth offending by March 2002. The YOT is working closely with the police and youth court to halve the time from arrest to sentence of persistent young offenders from 142 to 71 days. YOT preventative and early intervention referrals and services have increased significantly. These include: restorative conferences between victims and offenders; assessments and intervention in response to anti-social behaviour (to prevent the need for anti-social behaviour orders); assessments and enhanced services for looked after children at risk of re-offending; assessments and intervention for other high risk groups including young people involved in substance misuse and excluded from school.

Contact time with young people on court orders has doubled to twice weekly for three months, in accordance with revised national standards. The YOT national assessment tool has been implemented in Camden, enabling analysis of risk factors that contribute to young people offending. A new information system has also been purchased for the YOT, to enhance quality of monitoring.

More generally, all of the policies of the Home Office will impact on the residents of Hampstead and Highgate to a greater or lesser extent. For example:

376 Crime and Disorder Reduction Partnerships have been established;

racial harassment and racially motivated crimes have been made criminal offences by the Crime and Disorder Act 1998;

the asylum backlog has been cut from 103,495 at the end of January 2000 to 49,690 by the end of February 2001; and

good progress is being made in reducing the incidence of fire deaths in England and Wales. They have dropped from 605 in 1997 to 534 in 1999.

Information on the Home Office and its policies is also published on its website "www.homeoffice.gov.uk".

Borough By-elections

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received on the holding of a borough by-election on the same day as the county council election and general election; and if he will make a statement. [157869]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: None. Under existing legislation there is nothing to prevent a borough by-election from being held on the same day where the polls for the ordinary elections for county councils and a general election are being taken together. In that event, discretion on whether or not that casual election should also be combined with the other elections rests with the returning officers concerned.

Police Numbers

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the cause was of each revision to the statistics on police numbers for 31 March 2000 published in November 2000; and what the impact of each revision was on the difference between total police numbers for 31 March 2000 published in (a) November 2000 and (b) the final figures published on 15 January 2001. [157121]

Mr. Charles Clarke: No police strength figures were published in November 2000. The figures for 31 March first appeared in the Home Office Statistical Bulletin 'Police Service Personnel England and Wales as at 31 March 2000' published on 30 August 2000. A correction to the 31 March 2000 figures was made in the next police strength Bulletin (concerned with figures for 30 September 2000), which was first published on 14 December 2000. This correction was made because it was discovered there had been some double counting of the number of secondments to central services. This originated from the National Criminal Intelligence Service return being completed incorrectly. The overall police strength figures were revised downwards by 248 from 124,418 to 124,170.

The figures for 30 September 2000 which were published on 14 December 2000 were subsequently revised, and the Bulletin re-issued on 16 January 2001. There were no differences between the police figures for 31 March 2000 in these two Bulletins. The revisions made in the 16 January 2001 publication related to the figures for 30 September. There were two changes. First, the overall police strength figures were revised upwards by 451 officers because of undercounting by the Metropolitan Police Service (MPS). The number of officers seconded to Hertfordshire, Essex and Surrey had been deducted twice from the total number of officers.

Secondly, the MPS figure on minority ethnic officers on 30 September was corrected from 1,227 to 1,013 because the higher figure had included in the minority ethnic group some 214 officers classified as 'White Irish' or 'Other White'.

A further revision to the 30 September 2000 figures was made in the written answer given on 22 March 2001, Official Report, column 324W, to my hon. Friend the Member for Gravesham (Mr. Pond) which concerned police strength numbers on 31 January 2001. This was due to a correction from Northumbria police who reduced their total number of officers by 67 from 3,885 to 3,818.

Police Costs

Mr. Hilary Benn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the cost of employing police officers as a percentage of the total force budget for each police force in England for each year since 1990. [156174]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The information requested is set out in the table which has been placed in the Library.

Illegal Trafficking (Prostitution)

Mr. Tynan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) arrests and (b) successful prosecutions there have been of individuals suspected of illegal trafficking in women and girls for the purpose of prostitution in the last 12 months. [157525]

Mr. Charles Clarke: It is not possible to identify persons in the Home Office's Court Proceedings Database who are arrested or prosecuted for offences connected with illegal trafficking in women and girls for the purpose of prostitution.

The available information relates to persons proceeded against and those convicted of certain offences of procuration as follows:

Persons convicted of certain offences of procuration in England and Wales in 1999

	Proceeded against	Convicted
Procuring female for immoral purposes, or using drugs to obtain or facilitate sexual intercourse (Sexual Offences Act 1956, sections 2, 3, 4, 22 and 23)	5	1
Detention of female in brothel or other premises (ibid, sections 24)	—	—
Living on earnings of prostitution or exercising control over prostitute (ibid, sections 30 and 31)	48	37

Information for 2000 is not yet available.

Mr. Tynan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people have been deported from the United Kingdom due to their involvement in the illegal importation of women and girls from abroad for the purpose of sexual exploitation or prostitution in the last 12 months. [157526]

Mrs. Roche: The Immigration Service does not routinely receive statistics on prosecutions for non-immigration criminal offences, such as the involvement in the illegal importation of women and girls from abroad for the purpose of sexual exploitation or prostitution, therefore no correlation of these offences and the deportation of offenders can be made.

Voluntary Search and Rescue

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what support his Department gives to local voluntary search and rescue organisations. [157439]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Local voluntary search and rescue organisations benefit from the support which the Home Office gives to the search and rescue community at the national level.

The Home Office (HO) provides technical advice on radio communications and spectrum matters to the National Controlling Committee which meets under the auspices of Association of Chief Police Officers (ACPO). The committee, among other activities, vets applications by local voluntary search and rescue organisations to use dedicated HO frequencies.

It is anticipated that the work of this committee and HO support will be transferred during April 2001 to the United Kingdom Search and Rescue (SAR) Communications Working Group under the newly formed UK SAR Strategic Committee.

Wrongful Convictions

Mrs. Ellman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress he has made in providing support for people who have been wrongfully convicted. [157445]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The Home Office has set up a working party to look at what might be needed, in terms of advice and counselling, needed by those released after successful appeal against conviction. A report has been prepared by a consultant and recommendations will go to Ministers by the summer.

Mrs. Ellman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people have been released on grounds of wrongful conviction in the past five years. [157446]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Provisional figures relating to prisoners whose appeal was upheld on release and who were discharged on appeal for the past five years are shown in the table.

Provisional figures for this year from 1 January to 28 February, inclusive, show that of the 13,587 final discharges so far, 58 had their appeal upheld on release and 25 were discharged on appeal.

Number of prisoners whose appeal was upheld on their final release from prison, and the number of prisoners who were discharged on appeal, for the past five years

Year	Appeal upheld on release	Discharged on appeal
1996	222	218
1997	231	251
1998	404	287
1999	473	282
2000	405	220
Total	1,735	1,258

Racism

Mr. Stephen O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many complaints in relation to allegations of racism (a) were made, (b) were investigated by the police, (c) resulted in prosecutions and (d) resulted in successful prosecutions in (i) 1999 and (ii) 2000. [156076]

Mr. Charles Clarke [holding answer 29 March 2001]: Information recorded centrally shows that the number of racist incidents recorded by the police throughout England and Wales for the financial year 1998–99 was 23,049 and for 1999–2000 was 47,814. These are incidents recorded either under the Association of Chief Police Officers' definition of a racist incident

"any incident in which it appears to the reporting or investigating officer that the complaint involves an element of racial motivation, or any incident which includes an allegation of racial motivation made by any person" which applied until February 1999 or under the new simplified definition of a racist incident proposed by the Lawrence Inquiry, adopted at that time ("any incident which is perceived to be racist by the victim or any other person"). Incidents included here are therefore wider than the normal definition of a crime in the Crime Statistics and include low level harassment.

Information has been recorded centrally since 1999, relating to racially aggravated offences (the Crime and Disorder Act 1998 introduced a series of new racially aggravated offences from 30 September 1998), and published in 'Statistics on Race and the Criminal Justice System' on 18 January 2001 (a copy of which is in the Library). During the financial year 1999–2000 21,750 racially aggravated offences were recorded by police throughout England and Wales, of which 34 per cent. were detected by police. 3,815 racially aggravated offences were prosecuted at magistrates court. 1,073 (28 per cent.) resulted in convictions and 1,755 (46 per cent.) were either terminated early or acquitted and 990 (26 per cent.) cases were committed to the Crown Court for trial. A further 178 persons were tried at Crown Court, of whom approximately one half were convicted.

In terms of figures relating to investigations by police of these offences and any details regarding prosecutions relating to racist incidents, data are unavailable.

Police (Greater Manchester)

Mr. Stunell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many vacancies there were for police officers in the Greater Manchester Constabulary in (a) 1992, (b) 1997 and (c) 2001. [156182]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The available information is set out in the table. It compares the actual number of officers in post with the police authority's budgeted provision. Information on budgeted figures has been provided, where available, by the Chief Constable.

Greater Manchester Police

Year	Budgeted police numbers	Actual police numbers[1]	Vacancies
31 March 1992	7,057	7,061	0
31 March 1997	[2]n/a	6,922	n/k
31 January 2001[3]	[4]6,935	6,867	68

[1] Before 1 April 1995 actual police numbers were based on a headcount. Since April 1995 they have been counted on a full-time equivalent basis.
[2] The Greater Manchester Police budgeted figure for March 1997 was based on a headcount of 7,050. It is not therefore comparable to the actual figure which is based on full-time equivalents.
[3] Latest available published figures are currently those for 31 January 2001.
[4] The figures for January 2001 include the force's Crime Fighting Fund allocation.

I understand from the Greater Manchester Police that the vacancies at 31 January 2001 have now been filled.

Female Prisoners (Shackling)

Jackie Ballard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement about the shackling of a female prisoner from Highpoint to a prison officer during medical treatment recently. [155152]

Mr. Boateng: I have written separately to the hon. Member on this issue.

Pensioners (Home Security)

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many pensioner households have had Government funded and approved locks fitted to their homes; and if he will make a statement. [157587]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The "locks for pensioners" scheme that we are funding in conjunction with the Department for Environment, Transport and the Region's Home Energy Efficiency Scheme enables certain low income pensioners in high crime areas to have their house checked for security and if necessary to have additional security features such as door and window locks fitted. The scheme has been running in England for eight months and, by the end of March, almost 47,000 houses had been surveyed of which 22,441 were found to require security upgrades. So far, 21,715 of these have been referred to the registered installers and for 10,778 houses, the security upgrades are known to have been completed. The true figure will, however, be significantly higher as there can be a delay of several weeks between the work being completed and confirmation of this fact being received by the two organisations managing the scheme.

The equivalent scheme started in Wales only in February and, as yet, there are no centrally held figures for the numbers of Welsh households that have had improved security fittings as a result.

We have also funded a number of projects that provide security upgrades to burglary victims or other vulnerable people under our Reducing Burglary Initiative. We do not, however, have central records of the numbers fitted or whether the recipients were pensioners.

Juries

Mr. Hilary Benn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the progress of the review on whether deaf people should be allowed to serve on juries. [157232]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The Government are intending to publish a consultation paper on the implications of third party support for jurors, including the use of interpreters for deaf jurors, within the next few months.

Domestic Violence

Ms Moran: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimate he has made of the cost to public funds of dealing with domestic violence in the last 12 months. [157547]

Mr. Charles Clarke: We have not, in the last 12 months, undertaken an assessment of the cost to public funds of dealing with domestic violence. We know that this cost is a significant one: the research study "Counting the costs; estimating the impact of domestic violence in the London Borough of Hackney" published by Crime Concern in 1998, estimated the total cost of providing services for the survivors of domestic violence in Greater London to be in the region of £278 million per annum. This gives a fair indication of the scale of the costs involved.

The Government are determined to reduce all crimes of violence including domestic violence, which is a serious crime accounting for just under a quarter of all violent crime. Our strategy for doing so is set out in "fighting violent crime together: an action plan" which was published in January.

Crime (Blyth Valley)

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what measures he proposes to tackle crime in Blyth Valley. [157297]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The Government are committed to tackling crime effectively, not only by reacting properly when it occurs and having the appropriate measures in place to deal with the perpetrators, but by preventing it happening in the first instance.

Recorded crime statistics published on 16 January 2001 showed that overall crime had fallen by 0.2 per cent. in England and Wales in the 12 months to September 2000. This compared with an overall fall in the Northumberland police area of 5.5 per cent.—the 10th consecutive year of crime reduction in that area. Data relating to the Blyth Valley Crime and Disorder Reduction Partnership showed lower than average rates of offences per 1,000 population in key areas, including violence against the person, robbery, domestic burglary and theft of and from a vehicle.

We support the Partnership in its work to develop local strategies for reducing crime and disorder. Its local initiatives to bring about overall crime reduction and tackle drug-related crime, include targeted policing, Closed Circuit Television and Neighbourhood Warden schemes.

We have recently announced £60 million funding over the next three years to support Crime and Disorder Reduction Partnerships and £300 million to tackle drug-related problems, £220 million of which will be directed through the 376 Partnerships, to deliver community-based strategies.

Police Protection (Ministers)

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the total cost of police protection was for former Ministers who (a) are and (b) are no longer hon. Members for the latest 12 months for which figures are available. [157608]

Mr. Straw: We seek to ensure the most effective and efficient protective security arrangements for public figures in the light of the changing threat from terrorism and other continuing risks. It is not our policy to comment on the details of protection arrangements for individuals, as to do so could compromise their security.

Departmental Policies (Amber Valley)

Judy Mallaber: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will set out, with statistical information relating as directly as possible to the Amber Valley constituency, the effects on Amber Valley of his Department's policies and actions since 2 May 1997. [157132]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The Home Office is working to build a safe, just and tolerant society in which the rights and responsibilities of individuals, families and communities are properly balanced, and the protection and security of the public are maintained. Detailed information on the impact of Home Office policies across the full range of responsibilities is set out in Home Office Annual Reports. A copy of the most recent report, Home Office Annual Report 2000–01, is available in the Library. Information on recorded crime and policing is also published. "Recorded Crime England and Wales, 12 months to September 2000" and "Police Service Strength England and Wales, 30 September 2000" can be found in the Library. The recorded crime statistics include information on recorded crime by Basic Command Unit and Crime and Disorder partnerships.

The impact of Home Office policies and actions is not normally examined by constituency and the statistics which the Department collects, such as recorded crime, cannot be matched in the way requested although set out are examples relating to the Amber Valley constituency or the immediate locality:

Targeted Policing Initiative (TPI)

Derby constabulary was awarded a total of £407,000 for two schemes under round 2 of the TPI.

Derbyshire constabulary was awarded £317,000 for a force-wide project, which included; Mapping of the drug markets, identifying key targets and routes of supply, analysing information about the market and the production of an individual strategy for each market. The mapping of drug markets will allow for the creation of a dynamic approach to tackling the problem.

Derbyshire police (with other forces) was awarded £90,000 for a force-wide project, which included; Distraction burglary—Undertake research into the distraction burglary problem: its true extent, how offenders target victims and how offenders can be deterred once they have selected a potential target.

Closed Circuit Television (CCTV)

Amber Valley borough council was awarded approximately £127,000 for a 10-camera scheme, expanding the existing system into areas of Amber Valley's four main town centres, Alfreton, Belper, Heanor and Ripley.

Youth Offending

Amber Valley is covered by the Derbyshire Youth Offending Team (YOT). The Derbyshire YOT is providing Appropriate Adult services for young people when interviewed by police and has dealt with 242 requests for their services between April and December 2000. The Derbyshire YOT is utilising the ASSET assessment system in order to ensure intervention work is effectively targeted at the personal, family, social, educational and health problems that contribute to the causes of a young person's offending behaviour. The health staff attached to the YOT are carrying out basic assessments of young offenders for substance misuse and, where appropriate, referring them on to specialist substance misuse services for young people.

The police officers seconded to the Derbyshire and Derby City YOT have delivered 50 training sessions on the final warning scheme to over 1,200 police officers in order to ensure consistency of police assessment and referral to the YOTs. More than 12 community reparation schemes have been established throughout Derbyshire in order to allow the YOTs to deliver victim-offender mediation services. There is a wide range of activities available to meet the needs of the young person and provide opportunities for further development through accredited training and skills.

Youth Service staff play a lead role in the development of preventative initiatives to support the action plans of local Crime and Disorder youth crime reduction strategies at local council level. Derbyshire Youth Offending Service was successful in being awarded "Summer Splash" funding in July 2000. The service worked with other providers from both voluntary agencies and the local district council to deliver a variety of activities in four wards of Bolsover. This resulted in a marked reduction of nuisance calls and offending in this area.

More generally, all of the policies of the Home Office will impact on the residents of Amber Valley to a greater or lesser extent. For example:

376 Crime and Disorder Reduction Partnerships have been established;

racial harassment and racially motivated crimes have been made criminal offences by the Crime and Disorder Act 1998;

the asylum backlog has been cut from 103,495 at the end of January 2000 to 49,690 by the end of February 2001; and

good progress is being made in reducing the incidence of fire deaths in England and Wales. They have dropped from 605 in 1997 to 534 in 1999.

Information on the Home Office and its policies is also published on its website www.homeoffice.gov.uk.

Departmental Policies (Eccles)

Mr. Ian Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will set out, including statistical information relating as directly as possible to the Eccles constituency, the effects on Eccles of his Department's policies and actions since 2 May 1997. [157286]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The Home Office is working to build a safe, just and tolerant society in which the rights and responsibilities of individuals, families and communities are properly balanced, and the protection and security of the public are maintained. Detailed information on the impact of Home Office policies across the full range of responsibilities is set out in Home Office Annual Reports. A copy of the most recent report, Home Office Annual Report 2000–01, is available in the Library. Information on recorded crime and policing is also published. "Recorded Crime England and Wales, 12 months to September 2000" and "Police Service Strength England and Wales, 30 September 2000" can be found in the Library. The recorded crime statistics include information on recorded crime by Basic Command Unit and Crime and Disorder partnerships.

The impact of Home Office policies and actions is not normally examined by constituency and the statistics which the Department collects, such as recorded crime, cannot be matched in the way requested although set out are examples relating to the Eccles constituency or the immediate locality:

Reducing Burglary Initiative

Greater Manchester police in partnership with Salford city council were awarded approximately £253,000 for two schemes under round 2 of the Reducing Burglary Initiative.

One scheme for Pendlebury, Swinton Town Center, Valley Estate and Swinton Park was awarded nearly £80,000. The main interventions proposed are target hardening; community mobilisation; targeted policing and property marking.

One scheme covering Peel Green, Patricroft, Salford was awarded £173,000. The main interventions proposed are target hardening; a landlord accreditation service; community mobilisation and environmental resistance.

Closed Circuit Television (CCTV)

Salford city council has one scheme, potentially worth over £411,000, shortlisted for further consideration under round 2 of the CCTV Initiative. The scheme would cover parts of the Salford and Eccles constituencies.

Youth Offending

Eccles is covered by the Salford Youth Offending Team (YOT). While crime and fear of crime remain the most significant issue for communities, considerable progress has been made in the City during the past year, with the largest reduction of recorded crime within all of Greater Manchester. Total recorded crime reduced by 5.4 per cent, including a reduction in domestic burglary of 19 per cent., other burglary of 13 per cent. and a reduction in vehicle crime of 7 per cent. These figures indicate the success of a range of initiatives, such as the burglary reduction programmes. They reflect the determination of the partnership to continue in its multi-agency approach to the reduction of crime.

The Salford Youth Inclusion Project (YIP) is located in Seedley/Langworthy. The project started in July 2000 and receives up to £75,000 a year under the Youth Inclusion Programme. The objectives of YIP, administered by the Youth Justice Board are to: reduce arrest rates in the target group by 60 per cent.; reduce recorded crime in the area by 30 per cent. and achieve at least 1–3 reduction in truancy and exclusions among the target young people. YIPs provide targeted assistance to a core group of 13 to 16-year-olds most at risk of offending and school exclusion.

The Salford YIP is already working with 15–20 young people in this high-risk target group and over 60 young people more generally. The Salford YIP offers young people a robust assessment of their personal and training needs and an individually tailored package of assistance. This may include: mentoring; sports activity; arts and craft sessions themed around consequences of offending behaviour; education and training and pre-employment support and social skills development and health sessions.

The Salford YIP has successfully supported three of the 10 young people identified at most risk, into employment. A further two have taken up part-time employment. Five of the eight most persistent truants in the area have returned to school and a further group of at risk young people have taken up volunteering opportunities, continued into further education or joined the Army Cadets.

More generally, all of the policies of the Home Office will impact on the residents of Eccles to a greater or lesser extent. For example:

376 Crime and Disorder Reduction Partnerships have been established;

racial harassment and racially motivated crimes have been made criminal offences by the Crime and Disorder Act 1998;

the asylum backlog has been cut from 103,495 at the end of January 2000 to 49,690 by the end of February 2001; and

good progress is being made in reducing the incidence of fire deaths in England and Wales. They have dropped from 605 in 1997 to 534 in 1999.

Information on the Home Office and its policies is also published on its website www.homeoffice.gov.uk.

Stuart Howarth

Mr. Woolas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will instruct the Prison Service authorities to move Stuart Howarth (Et 7916) to an open prison; and what representations he has received concerning the appropriateness of the prison location where he is serving his sentence. [157229]

Mr. Boateng: No. The categorisation and allocation of prisoners is a matter for the Director General of the Prison Service. The Prison Service carries out the categorisation of prisoners according to a rigorous and objective assessment of the risk they present, and in accordance with established guidelines. These assessments are best carried out by those on the ground, but I can say that under the Prison Service Order on categorisation and allocation, a prisoner sentenced to more than 12 months for an offence of violence would not normally be regarded as suitable for category D (open conditions) on initial categorisation.

Mr. Howarth was sentenced on 27 March 2001, and following receipt of the necessary reports from the police and probation services and others, he will be categorised according to the likelihood that he will seek to escape and the risk that he would pose should he do so. Mr. Howarth's custodial behaviour and the risk he poses to control will also be taken into consideration.

Mr. Howarth's allocation to a prison establishment will depend on his security category, the need to make the best possible use of available spaces in training prisons, and his particular needs. I have not received any representations concerning the appropriateness of his current prison location. Furthermore, I understand from the governor of Manchester prison that Mr. Howarth has not made any representations locally about his location.

Immigration Rules

Mr. Wilkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on changes to the immigration rules to facilitate the entry into the UK of information technology and e-commerce specialists. [157695]

Mrs. Roche: The Government have made a number of changes in the immigration system in order to facilitate the entry into the United Kingdom of highly skilled people.

The results of a fundamental review of the work permit system, operated by the Department for Education and Employment, were announced in the 2000 Budget statement and a range of measures have been introduced to streamline the system over the last year. This has led to a number of changes facilitating the entry of information technology and e-commerce specialists. For example, the skills shortages list, which makes it easier to obtain a permit where no European Economic Area (EEA) resident is available to fill a post, has been updated to include more information technology and e-commerce jobs. Additionally, to ensure that the system responds quickly to shortages, a sector panel for the Information Technology Communications and Electronics industry has been established. Also, to be eligible for a work permit, two years' post-graduate work experience is no longer needed, thereby enabling non-EEA students with specialist skills to work immediately after graduation in the UK.

Other changes include a pilot scheme, launched by the Home Office in September 2000, to attract more business innovators to the UK. It is aimed at those entrepreneurs looking to develop business ideas in the service and technology sectors, especially e-commerce, even if they do not have substantial amounts of their own money to invest. 38 applications have so far been approved.

We are also developing a scheme designed to allow individuals of outstanding ability to come to the UK to seek work. This will help the UK in competing for highly skilled workers.

Security Service

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he has taken to recruit officers for the Security Service at universities other than Oxford, Cambridge and London. [157330]

Mr. Straw: The Security Service is committed to a policy of equal opportunity. The Service advertises in the national press and in media specifically offering employment opportunities for graduates from any higher education establishment, and not specific universities. Of those graduates recruited for the year 2000–01 as intelligence desk officers, at least 74 per cent. graduated from universities other than Oxford, Cambridge or London.

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many members of each ethnic group are employed in senior grades of the Security Service; and what proportion each grade represents of the total. [157331]

Mr. Straw: Currently, all senior employees in the Security Service, equivalent to Senior Civil Service grades, are white. The number of such employees represents 1.4 per cent. of total staffing

The Security Service has been working to raise its profile as an employer among under-represented groups, for example through the use of carefully targeted advertising. The Service is determined, through continuing recruitment campaigns, to have a work force that fully reflects the society that it defends.

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proportion of employees in senior grades in the Security Service are women. [157332]

Mr. Straw: Currently, 13.8 per cent. of the senior grades in the Security Service, that is grades equivalent to Senior Civil Service grades, are women.

Election Literature

Mr. Stephen O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the total costs were of (a) paper, (b) printing, (c) distribution and (d) circulating letters dated 14 February to acting returning officers for parliamentary constituencies in England and Wales, returning officers for local government areas in England and Wales and electoral registration officers for district and London boroughs in England and Wales in relation to leaflet ER3 published by the Communications Directorate of his Department in January; what the cost was of the destruction of the leaflet; and if he will make a statement. [157634]

Mr. Mike O'Brien [holding answer 9 April 2001]: The leaflet "Make Your Voice Heard" informs the public of changes to the system of updating the electoral register allowed by the Representation of the People Act 2000 and implemented on 16 February 2001. The costs for production of this leaflet, which was changed due to an error in calculating the cut-off date for applying for registration on April's "rolling register", are (a) £15,627.50 for paper; (b) £23,905.38 for printing; and (c) £947.50 for distribution. The costs of informing electoral administrators about the availability of the leaflet were marginal as notification was sent by e-mail. The cost of re-cycling the leaflet is £200. The leaflet was re-issued and has been replaced by another which is not date specific.

Tower Blocks

4. Mr. Hilary Benn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the safety and security of residents in tower blocks. [156023]

Mr. Mike O'Brien [pursuant to the reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Regent's Park and Kensington, North (Ms Buck) in response to a supplementary question to that asked by my hon. Friend the Member for Leeds, Central on 9 April 2001, Official Report, column 693]: My right hon. Friend the Home Secretary recently met my hon. Friend and local people involved in tackling the problems of drug abuse. I understood that the Home Secretary visited the Regent's Park and Kensington, North constituency as I informed the House but I have now been told that the meeting was at the House of Commons. I do, however, continue to assure my hon. Friend that tackling crack and associated drugs is high on the Government's agenda. We cannot tolerate the behaviour experienced by the residents in her constituency, and we are committed to addressing it.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

School Discipline

Mr. Edwards: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what guidance he plans to issue on school discipline following the outcome of the Marjorie Evans case. [155231]

Mr. Paul Murphy: I have been asked to reply.

In Wales, that is a matter for the National Assembly for Wales.

Employment Service

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what target levels have been set for the aims and objectives of the Employment Service in 2001–02. [156866]

Mr. Blunkett: The targets for the Employment Service, which I am announcing today, build on the success of the agency in delivering the Government's welfare to work policies, working in close partnership with employers and others. These targets pave the way for the new agency, Jobcentre Plus, whose pathfinder offices will begin work in October. They give stronger emphasis than ever before to helping individuals facing particular difficulty in the labour market to move from unemployment and economic inactivity into sustainable employment. The highest priority will be given to helping people who have been economically inactive for long periods, including lone parents, to find work, and to capitalise on the opportunities created by the new generation of New Deals. For the first time, the Employment Service will have a target to measure its success in helping long term unemployed people not only to find work but to remain in work. I will also be introducing, from October, two new targets: to support ES's efforts to achieve parity of outcomes for ethnic minority clients by 2004, and to support the key role which ES will play in identifying and remedying shortfalls in the basic skills of unemployed people, to enhance their employability.

I commend this package of targets. They are challenging for the Employment Service to deliver. I believe that the job entry targets are very stretching. I am looking for improved levels of customer service to jobseekers and employers, together with consolidation of the improved performance against the Jobseeker's Allowance Labour Market Activity target. These targets cover a full year, but I propose to carry out a comprehensive consultation and review later in the year that will inform the setting of targets for the new Agency for people of working age, called Jobcentre Plus, for 2002–03.

The targets for the Employment Service for 2001–02 are:

Vision and Purpose

The Employment Service aims to make a major contribution to an efficient and flexible labour market, and to the Government's objectives of an increase in the effective supply of labour, and countering poverty and social exclusion by helping welfare recipients facing the most severe disadvantages to compete effectively for jobs. It does this by working closely with employers and with its private, voluntary and public sector partners to provide a quality service for all people without a job and to promote employment opportunities for all who can work. It aims to attract a diverse range of vacancies and to fill those vacancies quickly by matching the right people and skills with the right jobs. Its chief priority is to help individuals facing particular difficulty in the labour market to move from welfare and economic inactivity into sustainable employment. It does this through correct application of the Jobseeker's Allowance (JSA) regime, delivery of the New Deals, and provision of appropriate information, advice, training and support. The challenge and opportunity for the Employment Service, is to sustain continuous improvement in its services to jobseekers and employers and to make those services more accessible and relevant to customer needs, through effective use of modern technology and close working with a wide range of partners.

Aim

To help people without jobs to find work and employers to fill their vacancies.

Objectives and Targets

Objective A

To help all people without jobs, and particularly those on welfare and at a disadvantage in the labour market, to find and keep work by providing appropriate information, advice, training and support and by encouraging employers to open up more opportunities to them.

Targets

A1: To help into work 70,000 people who are either jobless lone parents, participants in the New Deal for Partners, participants in the New Deal for Disabled People or other disabled people claiming 'inactive' benefits.

A2: To help into work 410,000 participants in the JSA New Deals, New Deal 50+, Employment Zones, other disabled people not recorded in A1, and others at a particular disadvantage.

A3: To help into work 720,000 welfare recipients and other disadvantaged people.

A4: To help into work 1,225,000 jobless people.

A5: For 75 per cent. of long-term claimants to be off benefit 13 weeks after starting a job into which they were placed by the Employment Service.

Objective B

To ensure that the rights and relevant labour market responsibilities of people on JSA and other benefits are fulfilled, while helping to combat fraud and abuse of the benefit system.

Target

B1: To ensure that the relevant labour market responsibilities of people on JSA are fulfilled in 90 per cent. of cases checked.

Objective C

To harness new technology, the pursuit of excellence and continuous improvement to deliver effective, efficient and accessible services to all people without jobs and to employers, in Jobcentres and increasingly through other locations and means of communication.

Targets

C1: To achieve a 92.5 per cent. customer service level for jobseekers.

C2: To achieve an 82 per cent. customer service level for employers.

Objective D

To deliver services to all ES customers in a way which respects individual differences, helps to overcome disadvantages due to ethnicity, gender, age or disability and achieves the best possible outcome for each of them.

D1: From October: To achieve a proportion of new ethnic minority claimants who leave JSA for a job within 12 months, which is equal to the percentage of all white claimants leaving JSA for a job within 12 months (to work towards equality of outcomes by 2004.) (Target level to be announced.)

D2: From October: To screen benefit claimants for basic skills requirement and where needed refer for appropriate training. (Exact target wording and level to be announced.)

Milestone Target

By 30 September 2001, for 95 per cent. of jobseekers claiming JSA to have been asked to identify their ethnicity and for this answer to be recorded.

Target levels for the Employment Service in Scotland and Wales, derived from the GB wide targets, will be announced shortly.

Teacher Vacancies (Hazel Grove)

Mr. Stunell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many vacancies for teachers there were in the Hazel Grove constituency in (a) 1992, (b) 1997 and (c) 2001. [156176]

Ms Estelle Morris: The information requested above is not held centrally. The number of vacancies for teachers in the maintained sector for Stockport LEA were as follows:

	January

The latest year for which published data are currently available is 2000.

In 1992, vacancy figures were collected for the maintained nursery, primary and secondary sector only.

The number of regular teachers (excluding short-term supply) in the maintained schools sector in England at January 2000 was 404,600, the highest for ten years and 6,900 higher than January 1998.

There was a growth of 2,300 in the number of people recruited to train to be teachers between 1999–2000 and 2000–01, the first such increase since 1992–93.

From April 2001 new graduate recruits can expect to earn £17,000 a year (up 6 per cent. from the previous year) and starting salaries in Inner London will rise to £20,000 (up 9 per cent. from the previous year).

Sure Start

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many of the districts invited to develop programmes for the fourth wave of Sure Start programmes are districts which qualify for funding under the Neighbourhood Nurseries Initiative. [157116]

Yvette Cooper [holding answer 9 April 2001]: All 66 fourth wave Sure Start districts will be able to apply for funding under the Neighbourhood Nurseries Initiative. All the fourth wave Sure Start districts have large proportions of their population living in wards which are among the most deprived 20 per cent. in England according to DETR's Index of Deprivation. Any area covered by wards in the most deprived 20 per cent. wards in England can apply for funding under the Neighbourhood Nurseries Initiative. Guidance on the two initiatives strongly encourages close and co-operative working between Sure Start programmes and Neighbourhood Nurseries.

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment, pursuant to his answer of 28 March 2001, Official Report, columns 679–80W, on Sure Start (1) (a) if the information available on deprivation included statistics on the varying levels of deprivation within the borough of Warrington and (b) what assessment was made of health inequalities within Warrington when making a decision; [157176]

(2) what information was available to him on levels of deprivation and health inequalities in the (a) Bewsey, (b) Orford, (c) Poplars, (d) Hulme and (e) Poulton North wards in Warrington prior to making a decision on the fourth wave of Sure Start. [157177]

Yvette Cooper [holding answer 9 April 2001]: The Government identify Sure Start areas at the local authority district level using information from DETR's Index of Deprivation on levels of deprivation at the district level. Stakeholders in these districts are then invited to select a local catchment area for a Sure Start programme in that district based on their knowledge about local needs and levels of poverty and disadvantage and the Government's requirement that the area must > "largely be covered by wards within the worst 20 per cent. of wards in England according to DETR's Index of Deprivation".

The stakeholders would be able to look at more detailed sub-district information, including that on health inequalities, in deciding on the local catchment area.

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list the Sure Start programmes identified to date, indicating the programmes which are located in areas which are among the 20 per cent. most disadvantaged areas as identified by the DETR index. [157117]

Yvette Cooper [holding answer 9 April 2001]: The information requested is contained in tables, copies of which have been placed in the Libraries.

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment, pursuant to his answer of 28 March 2001, Official Report, columns 679–80W, on Sure Start, if he will list those districts assessed for the fourth wave of Sure Start programmes; which indices were used to measure levels of deprivation in those areas; and if he will publish the results. [157175]

Yvette Cooper [holding answer 9 April 2001]: The information requested is contained in tables, copies of which have been placed in the Libraries.

Infant/Primary Schools

Judy Mallaber: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list for each infant and primary school in Amber Valley the number of classes containing over 30 pupils on (a) 1 May 1997 and (b) the latest date for which figures are available. [157118]

Ms Estelle Morris: The Government do not publish figures for individual schools. In the table are the figures for the Amber Valley constituency and Derbyshire LEA. These clearly show that a significant number of children in Derbyshire are benefiting from being in smaller primary classes as a result of the Government's investment in education.

Number of classes with over 30 pupils—January 1997 and 2001

	1997	2001
Derbyshire
KS1 classes	408	29
All primary classes	1,314	613
Derby
KS1 classes	—	3
All primary classes	—	191
Amber Valley
KS1 classes	33	5
All primary classes	122	95

Notes:

1. In April 1997 Derbyshire LEA divided into two separate authorities—Derbyshire and City of Derby
2. Figures derived from returns made to the Department in January each year—Annual Schools Census

British Sign Language

Mr. Hilary Benn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what percentage of schools teaching deaf children offer British sign language as part of the curriculum. [157233]

Jacqui Smith: This information is not collected centrally.

Stockholm European Council

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what studies have been made by institutions of the European Union concerning the demographic challenge referred to in paragraph 7 of the Presidency Conclusions of the Stockholm European Council. [157335]

Ms Jowell: I welcome the references in the Stockholm Conclusions to demography and active ageing, particularly the call at paragraph 9 for a joint report by 2002 covering this topic. I understand that European institutions have undertaken a range of studies, including a European Commission communication published in October 2000 and entitled "Communication on the future evolution of social protection from a long-term point of view: Safe and sustainable pensions". The Economic Policy Committee produced a report on a similar theme on 6 November 2000 entitled "Progress report to the ECOFIN Council on the impact of ageing populations on public pensions". A more technical overview is given by the Commission's Economic Paper 138, published in November 1999 by K. McMorrow and W. Roeger, entitled "The economic consequences of ageing populations". Further information on these and related documents can be found on the European Union's "Europa" website.

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment where the new European Social Agenda, referred to in paragraph 25 of the Presidency Conclusions of the Stockholm European Council adopted at Nice was published; and what changes are envisaged in EU social policy in the next five years. [157337]

Ms Jowell: The new European Social Agenda was published as Annexe 1 to the Presidency Conclusions of the Nice European Council Meeting held on 7, 8 and 9 December 2000. This is easily accessible through the European Union "Europa" website. A text of the European Social Agenda was deposited in the Libraries of both Houses on 19 December 2000.

The European Social Agenda sets out a framework and proposals to modernise European social policy over the next five years. Many of the proposals will contribute directly to the Lisbon strategic goal of becoming "The most competitive and dynamic knowledge based economy in the world", for example commitments to increasing employability through lifelong learning, and addressing skills shortages, particularly in ICT.

The initiative now lies with the Commission to bring forward individual proposals. The UK Government will continue to scrutinise each proposal as it is brought forward to ensure that it has a proper treaty base.

School Standards and Framework Act

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if it is the policy of the Government that independent appeals tribunals under section 94(6) of the School Standards and Framework Act 1998 should inform appellants that their decisions are binding in law. [157459]

Ms Estelle Morris [holding answer 9 April 2001]: Paragraph 15 of Schedule 24 to the School Standards and Framework Act 1998 specifies what information an appeal panel must give to appellants when informing them of the panel's decision on their appeal for a school place. It does not require appeal panels to inform appellants that its decision is binding on the admission authority whose decision is the subject of the appeal.

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what assessment he has made of the compatibility of his powers to overrule an independent appeals panel under section 94(6) of the School Standards and Framework Act 1998 with the United Kingdom's obligations under the European Convention on Human Rights. [157460]

Ms Estelle Morris [holding answer 9 April 2001]: Section 96 of the School Standards and Framework Act 1998 provides local education authorities with a power of last resort to direct the admission of children to a foundation school when those children have been refused admission to, or been excluded from, all schools within a reasonable distance. Upon a referral from the governing body concerned, section 97 of the 1998 Act empowers the Secretary of State to name an alternative school in the direction. The Colne Community School was the subject of the last direction proposed by the Essex local education authority and referred to the Secretary of State. In the event, a vacancy arose and the pupil was admitted without the need for a direction.

The Court of Appeal has held, in R v. Richmond LBC ex parte JC, that the requirements of Article 6 of the European Convention on Human Rights are not engaged in admission appeals, because admission appeals are determinative only of parents' preferences as to the school at which they wish education to be provided for their child, rather than any civil right of the child.

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what the policy of the Government is concerning overcrowded schools, with particular reference to the Colne Community School, Essex. [157461]

Ms Estelle Morris [holding answer 9 April 2001]: The School Standards and Framework Act 1998 requires each maintained school to have a 'standard number', which is the minimum number of pupils it must admit, if there is demand. This continues a principle established in the Education Reform Act 1988. Where an individual school chooses to have a higher 'admission number', that is the minimum number of pupils it must admit, where there is demand. Once an admission number has been set, the admission authority must respect that number, unless exceptional circumstances apply.

The Colne Community School, like all other maintained schools, can refuse applications for places once the standard number, or higher admission number, has been reached. But the 1998 Act makes sensible provision for local education authorities to place children in schools which have reached their standard number, or higher admission number, if all other schools within a reasonable distance have refused the child a place or where the child has been excluded from all other schools within a reasonable distance. The alternative would mean the pupil attending a school beyond a reasonable distance.

Administrative Burdens (Schools)

Mr. Coaker: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what steps he is taking to reduce administrative burdens in schools. [157775]

Jacqui Smith: The Government are fully committed to reducing administrative burdens in schools in order to allow teachers to concentrate on teaching and raising standards. Examples of our action to do so include:

We have guaranteed to cut by a third the number of documents, and by a half the number of pages, that the Government send automatically to schools during this school year—in the first two terms of this school year, we will have halved the paperwork we sent to schools, compared with the first two terms last year.

We have radically simplified this year's Standards Fund—we have replaced bidding, claiming and reporting with a single expenditure returns sheet; we have allowed schools to vire funds between almost all grant headings; we have allowed schools to carry funds over to the end of the school year; and we have introduced monitoring against existing targets.

We have placed model schemes of work on the DfEE website to underpin all National Curriculum subjects at Key Stages 1–3—they are entirely voluntary and teachers may adopt them or adapt them as they wish. These have now been joined by over 1,000 useful lesson plans and resources in a further effort to reduce paperwork and make the necessary lesson preparation as straightforward as possible.

We have developed new ICT resources, including the launch of:

(a) EASEA—a full electronic in-tray and document archiving service for head teachers, teachers and governors that now has 7,000 registered users

(b) TeacherNet—a single web page offering links to the full range of educational resources on the internet

(c) an internet based "A-Z" of school leadership and management—an electronic encyclopaedia for heads with succinct, practical guidance on a wide range of topics, full search facilities, and links through to reference material on organisational and legal issues, and examples of good practice.

We have harnessed DfEE and Cabinet Office resources to simplify some of the paperwork that schools complete—the first results of this joint project are set out in the "Making a Difference: Reducing School Paperwork" report. This shows potential savings for a typical school of over 200 hours every year—equivalent to more than a month's work for one person; and across the school system 4.5 million hours could be saved annually.

We are reducing data collection and avoiding data request duplication. We have set up a high level group with head teacher representation to review all new and existing DfEE data collection. This approach has been extended to involve QCA, Ofsted and TTA. We are also developing a common set of data for schools that, from 2002, will be collected once only and shared electronically by all authorised parties and agencies.

Teacher workload is being reduced with 44,000 FTE extra non-administrative support staff, including teaching assistants and learning mentors, since 1997. Within this, we have provided funding to recruit and train an additional 20,000 FTE teaching assistants between 1999 and 2002.

We have introduced a £35 million Technology Package to enable schools to invest in new computers for management and administration, provide training and install software to introduce a seamless system that will save the average school five days work per year.

We have reviewed Ofsted procedures. Ofsted inspections can be a source of pressure on teachers and we have taken steps to reduce that pressure through the reduced notice period; shorter 'light touch' inspections for the most effective schools; and extending the maximum interval between inspections to six years.

We have provided specific help for small schools. In 2000, we set up two grants within the Standards Fund to assist small schools and we have now merged these into a single Small Schools Fund. The Fund provides support for small schools to help them with the extra difficulties that administration and collaboration present. The Fund is worth £80 million in 2001–02 and is guaranteed for at least three years.

School Leavers

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many (a) male and (b) female 16-year-olds left school in the last six years without recognised qualifications. [157824]

Ms Estelle Morris: The numbers of (a) male and (b) female pupils in England aged 16 who achieved no GCSE or GNVQ equivalent passes in the last six years are shown in the table.

	(a) Male	(b) Female	Total
1994–95	27,453	19,153	46,606
1995–96	27,142	19,071	46,213
1996–97	26,216	18,738	44,954
1997–98	22,539	15,329	37,868
1998–99	20,942	14,094	35,036
1999–2000	19,191	13,114	32,305

Head Teachers (Coventry)

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how much money will be paid to head teachers in schools in Coventry, South as a part of the education funding announced in the budget. [157857]

Ms Estelle Morris: Schools will receive School Standards Grant (SSG) on the basis of the number of pupils on roll as at 18 January 2001. The following table shows the amounts individual schools will receive:

	Amount (£)
Primary schools; middle deemed primary with no year 8 or 9 class; nursery schools; PRUs
Fewer than 100.5 pupils	7,000
At least 100.5 but fewer than 200.5	13,500
At least 200.5 but fewer than 400.5	24,000
At least 400.5 but fewer than 600.5	30,500
600.5 or more	48,000
Secondary schools; middle deemed secondary; and middle deemed primary with year 8 or year 9 class
Fewer than 600.5	58,000
At least 600.5	70,000
1200.5 or more	82,000
Special schools
Fewer than 100.5	20,000
100.5 or more	28,000

It is intended that maintained schools will receive these sums in their delegated budget shares by mid May.

Also, schools will receive additional devolved capital funding, via a formula, based on a lump sum of £6,000 per school plus an amount based on the number of pupils in the school. In Coventry, South the nursery school will receive £7,168; primary schools will receive an average £10,639; secondary schools will receive an average £28,905 and special schools will receive an average £10,826.

General Teaching Council

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has for the involvement of teachers employed by local education authorities in central support services, in membership and registration on, and the work of, the General Teaching Council. [157866]

Jacqui Smith: From 1 June, all qualified teachers employed to teach in maintained schools and non-maintained special schools will be required to register with the General Teaching Council (GTC). Those that are employed by local education authorities in their central support services, but who are not deployed to teach pupils in schools, may be eligible to register voluntarily. The GTC is an independent organisation and it is for the Council to decide whether or how to involve teachers and others in their work.

Literacy and Numeracy (Camden)

Ms Glenda Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list the data for the most recent figures which are available for (a) literacy and (b) numeracy in the London borough of Camden. [158017]

Ms Estelle Morris: The table shows the percentage pupils reaching the expected level or above in the Key Stage 1, 2 and 3 tests in Camden in 2000.

Percentage

	Reading	Writing	Spelling	English	Mathematics
Key Stage 1: Achieving level 2 or above	79	78	64	—	87
Key Stage 2: Achieving level 4 or above	79	50	—	72	70
Key Stage 3: Achieving level 5 or above	—	—	—	64	59

Teacher Support (Special Needs)

Mr. Coaker: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what steps he is taking to help teachers support pupils with social and emotional difficulties in schools; and if he will make a statement. [157906]

Jacqui Smith: Support is provided through the special educational needs component of the Standards Fund. In 2001–02, we are supporting expenditure to a total of £82 million on SEN. This includes support for the training and professional development of teachers and others dealing with pupils with SEN. It also covers support for work with pupils with emotional, behavioural and social development difficulties as part of activity designed to promote inclusion. Support is also provided through the National Healthy School Standard, which includes emotional health and wellbeing as one of its eight key themes.

The Government will shortly be publishing good practice guidance on promoting children's mental health in early years and school settings. The guidance will offer pointers and examples of good practice in the area of early identification and intervention for children and young people experiencing mental health problems in pre-school and school settings.

Departmental Policies (Amber Valley)

Judy Mallaber: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will set out, with statistical information relating as directly as possible to the Amber Valley constituency, the effects on Amber Valley of his Department's policies and actions since 2 May 1997. [157127]

Mr. Wills: Details of the effects of a range of the Department's policies on the Amber Valley constituency and Derbyshire LEA have been placed in the Library.

Departmental Policies (Eccles)

Mr. Ian Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will set out, including statistical information relating as directly as possible to the Eccles constituency, the effects on Eccles of his Department's policies and actions since 2 May 1997. [157285]

Mr. Wills: Details of the effects of a range of the Department's policies on the Eccles constituency and Salford LEA have been placed in the Library.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Legal Aid

Mr. Stinchcombe: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how much was spent on (a) criminal and (b) civil legal aid in (i) 1998–99, (ii) 1999–2000 and (iii) 2000–01; and what the projected figure is for 2001–02. [R] [157429]

Mr. Lock: I shall reply to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

Mr. Stinchcombe: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what research his Department has (a) commissioned and (b) evaluated on the impact of the Legal Services Commission on people excluded from civil legal aid as a result of the Access to Justice Act 1999. [R] [157434]

Mr. Lock: The Lord Chancellor's Department has commissioned a joint research project involving the universities of Nottingham, Oxford and Surrey. This will be the first major comparative evaluation of the effects of conditional fees on personal injury litigation and will report towards the end of this year. The research will contribute to a better understanding of the range of methods available for supporting litigation where risks are substantially removed from the claimant. It will also inform us how the legal services conditional fee market is operating and developing. The researchers will create a database that can be used in conjunction with data collected in future for the purposes of policy evaluation and for future policy changes.

Mr. Stinchcombe: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how much was spent on civil legal aid in relation to (a) social security, (b) employment, (c) landlord and tenant disputes, (d) immigration and nationality and (e) consumer issues in (i) 1998–99, (ii) 1999–2000 and (iii) 2000–01; what has been the change in the level of civil legal aid since the creation of the Community Legal Service, to civil legal aid in each of these areas; and what plans he has to increase the allocation of civil legal aid for these areas. [R] [157430]

Mr. Lock: This information is not available in the format requested and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Information is, however, available for expenditure on legal advice and assistance for 1998–99 and 1999–2000.

	£ million
(a) Social security and welfare
(i) 1998–99	16.651
(ii) 1999–2000	14.903
(b) Employment
(i) 1998–99	2.038
(ii) 1999–2000	1.936
(c) Landlord and tenant disputes
(i) 1998–99	14.580
(ii) 1999–2000	13.262
(d) Immigration and nationality
(i) 1998–99	48.800
(ii) 1999–2000	46.167
(e) Consumer issues
(i) 1998–99	2.697
(ii) 1999–2000	2.518

Information for 2000–01 is not yet available.

Legal aid provision, whether under the previous or current legislation has never been allocated to specific case categories. Rather, the grant of legal aid has always depended on the merits of each individual application.

Community Legal Service

Mr. Stinchcombe: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what assessment he has made of the capacity of the community legal service to reduce (a) child poverty and (b) social exclusion; and how these policy aims were incorporated in the Legal Service Commission corporate plan for 2000 to 2004. [R] [157433]

Mr. Lock: One of the key aims of the community legal service (CLS) is to help tackle social exclusion through improving access to legal advice, information and representation. This is reflected in the Lord Chancellor's Department's strategic objectives and public service agreement targets.

In order to measure how effectively the CLS is tackling social exclusion through meeting previously unmet need for legal help and information, we have commissioned the legal services research centre to undertake a major long-term research project to measure and characterise levels of legal need in England and Wales. It will be known as the national periodic survey and will be based on a survey of 4,500 households, and it should provide a reliable source of information on how well the CLS is achieving its aims. The national periodic survey will be complemented by the local needs surveys carried out by the CLS partnerships.

The Lord Chancellor's Department is also producing a paper in collaboration with the Law Centres Federation which will set out how the CLS is helping to tackle social exclusion and the future role it can play.

The Legal Services Commission's corporate plan for 2000 to 2004, includes a section on the CLS. The opening part of the section is concerned with the overall purpose and objectives of the CLS and it refers to the key aim of helping to reduce social exclusion. The plan makes the link between the Lord Chancellor's Department's strategic objectives and the public service agreement targets and explains how the CLS will help to reduce social exclusion.

There are no specific CLS initiatives or targets in relation to the category of child poverty, but this category is being taken forward under the overall heading of tackling social exclusion.

Disability Discrimination Act (Claims)

Mr. Hilary Benn: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many people have received legal aid in respect of claims under the Disability Discrimination Act 1995. [157234]

Mr. Lock: In the 11 months from 1 April 2000 to 28 February 2001, two certificates were issued for people to receive legal representation in court cases under the Disability Discrimination Act 1995. It is not possible to identify the number of people who have received other levels of publicly funded legal service under the Disability Discrimination Act, as no specific case category exists on the computer system that records these types of work.

Immigration Adjudicators

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many (a) full-time and (b) part-time immigration adjudicators are employed to hear immigration and asylum appeals. [157506]

Jane Kennedy: As of 1 April 2001 there are:

(a) 76 full-time and

(b) 323 part-time adjudicators.

Children and Family Court Advisory and Support Service

Mr. Ian Stewart: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department when she will publish the framework document for the children and family court advisory and support service. [158232]

Jane Kennedy: The framework document for CAFCASS has been published today. Copies have been placed in the Library and sent to interested parties. Further copies are available from the Department on request.

Law Centres

Mr. Stinchcombe: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how much money was allocated to neighbourhood law centres in (a) 1997–98, (b) 1998–99 and (c) 1999–2000; and what plans he has to increase the budget allocation for such centres. [R] [157437]

Mr. Lock: The Legal Aid Board made grants to nine law centres. It made payments to these and other not-for-profit (NfP) organisations (including to law centres not funded by grants from the board) for civil legal aid work that they undertook. Total payments to law centres were:

(a) in 1997–98, £4.439 million out of a total payment to NfPs of £12.927 million;

(b) in 1998–99, £4.164 million out of a total payment to NfPs of £17.321 million; and

(c) in 1999–2000, £4.044 million out of a total payment to NfPs of £18.478 million.

Since January 2000, the Legal Services Commission (which has replaced the Legal Aid Board) has provided legal help services exclusively under contracts with providers able to meet the specified quality standards. The Lord Chancellor has directed the commission to spend at least £20 million on contracts with NfP organisations, including law centres and neighbourhood advice agencies. Contracts with NfP organisations let in the 15-month period January 2000-March 2001 had a value of £36,111,227.

On 12 March 2001, the Legal Services Commission issued a consultation paper about future funding within the CLS for the nine law centres which it funds by grants. The paper set out proposals for translating current grant funding into contract funding. The Lord Chancellor has said that he expects these grants to be phased out by April 2002 and to be replaced by contracted funding targeted on eligible clients and priority needs. The Legal Services Commission is working with the Law Centres Federation and the law centres to effect this change.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Forestry Commission Research Agency

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what targets were set for the Forestry Commission Research Agency for 2000–01; and what targets have been set for 2001–02. [158233]

Mr. Morley: The targets for the Forestry Commission Research Agency in 2000–01 and 2001–02 are as follows:

2000–01

1. To achieve a customer satisfaction rating of at least 96 per cent.
2. To increase the output of peer reviewed scientific papers submitted and subsequently accepted for publication by 10 per cent. on the 1998–99 actual.
3. To have the work of Woodland Ecology Branch and the statisticians reviewed by visiting groups.
4. To hold the weighted average cost of a researcher day to the same level as 1999–2000 in real terms.
5. To achieve a 2 per cent. reduction in real terms in the cost of support services.
6. To achieve 100 per cent. cost recovery including a return on capital employed of 6 per cent. in real terms.

2001–02

1. To achieve a satisfaction rating for FC customers of at least 96 per cent.
2. To maintain the output of peer reviewed scientific papers submitted and subsequently accepted for publication at 2000–01 levels.
3. To have the work of Pathology Branch and Environmental Research Branch reviewed by visiting groups.
4. To hold the weighted average cost of a researcher day and support services at 2000–01 levels in real terms.
5. To achieve at least 99 per cent. cost recovery including a return on capital employed of 6 per cent. in real terms.

Copies of the Forest Research Agency's Corporate Plan for 2001–04, which contains more information about the Agency's targets, will be placed in the Library of the House when it is published in May.

EU Enlargement

Mr. Jack: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement setting out the factors so far identified in the EU enlargement negotiations which could lead to a breaching of the current agricultural budgetary guideline. [157524]

Ms Quin: The financial perspective for 2000–06, agreed at the Berlin Council in March 1999, set aside up to 58 billion euro for spending in the new member states. This included 12.41 billion euro to extend CAP and rural development measures to the new member states. The Government's objective is to ensure that the financial perspective is respected.

Foot and Mouth

Mr. Paice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food on what basis the level of compensation for the Animal Welfare Disposal scheme was set for (a) new season lambs and (b) ewes in lamb or with lamb. [156653]

Ms Quin [holding answer 2 April 2001]: The welfare payment for breeding ewes was derived from the pre-FMD value of a breeding ewe with lambs at foot which are normally traded at a fixed price per life. The value for new season lambs that have already been weaned and are being fed concentrates for the early lighter lamb market is a percentage of the expected market value. The rates of payment announced will apply for two months and be reviewed before expiry of the period.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will estimate the impact on the value of (a) domestic and (b) overseas United Kingdom livestock trade in each of the next five years based on the assumption of endemic foot and mouth disease. [156917]

Ms Quin [holding answer 5 April 2001]: No such estimate has been, or will be made. As my hon. Friend knows, the Government are committed to reduce and then completely eradicate the current foot and mouth disease outbreak thus ensuring that FMD does not become endemic in the UK.

Ms Oona King: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will ensure that RSPCA officers are present during any cull of over 5,000 livestock. [157541]

Mr. Morley: The RSPCA have an open invitation to visit the major culling sites and they have already been to Great Orton several times.

Mr. Webb: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will relax the rules regarding set-aside grasslands so that cattle from other farmers can be grazed on such grasslands where feed supplies are running short. [157371]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 6 April 2001]: A derogation from the arable area payment scheme to allow set-aside land to be used for grazing, where foot and mouth disease restrictions prevent movement of the animals, was announced on 16 March.

Organic Farming Scheme

Mr. Breed: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many farmers have made applications for funds from the organic farming scheme; and how many of those applications have been successful in each phase of the scheme since it began. [157161]

Mr. Morley: Between the organic farming scheme opening on 6 April 1999 and it closing for review on 30 November, 1,270 valid applications were received. Since the scheme re-opened on 2 January this year around 600 further valid applications have been received.

Correspondence

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he will respond to the fax of 20 March from the hon. Member for North Essex concerning restrictions relating to the welfare, movement and sale of livestock belonging to Mr. P. Gladwin of Carr House Farm, Great Wigborough, Essex. [157390]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 6 April 2001]: I replied to the fax from the hon. Member for North Essex on 4 April 2001.

Fisheries

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will take steps to ensure that the English fishing fleet receives financial assistance equivalent to that provided by the Scottish Executive for the Scottish fishing industry. [157241]

Mr. Morley: The decision to provide additional assistance worth £11.5 million for the restructuring of the fishing industry and rejuvenation of ports in England was made after careful consideration of the difficulties the industry has been facing.

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the recent OECD report on transitional financial assistance to the fishing industry. [157237]

Mr. Morley: The report by OECD on the economic and policy implications of transition to responsible fisheries is a welcome examination of the challenges involved in adopting more sustainable fishing methods across the developed world. One finding is that direct financial assistance to fishing industries can be detrimental to long-term sustainability unless it is carefully targeted at restructuring and complementary to management controls. This is consistent with the UK Government's view and the £22.5 million package of aid for the English industry which I announced on 2 April is designed with long-term environmental and economic sustainability in mind.

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make available transitional aid to allow the fishing industry the means to introduce conservation measures and meet short-term losses arising from their introduction. [157240]

Mr. Morley: Grant is available under the EU fisheries scheme FIFG for the adoption of conservation measures, for example, selective fishing gear and diversification away from pressure stocks. This is a priority area of the funding I announced on 2 April. It is, however, not appropriate to compensate fishermen for conserving stocks from which they will attain long-term benefit.

Mr. Steen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how much of the package of aid to the English fishing industry contained in the press release on this Department's website (Ref: 1219/01) is funding which has already been announced. [157881]

Mr. Morley: As explained in the press release, £11 million had already been committed to the FIFG grants scheme and I was launching the scheme in England. The £6 million funding for restructuring the industry and the £5.5 million DETR funding for rejuvenation of fishing ports were new announcements.

Mr. Steen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the criteria used for awarding the package of aid to the English fishing industry for decommissioning. [157880]

Mr. Morley: I will shortly be discussing with representatives of the industry how these restructuring funds should be used.

Aquaculture

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the compatibility of UK policies with the Code of Conduct drawn up by the Federation of European Aquaculture Producers for the development of sustainable aquaculture. [157269]

Mr. Morley: No formal assessment has been carried out, but the Government welcome the code as an initiative which promotes best practice which is consistent with statutory requirements.

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the research studies used by the Government to evaluate the potential impact of the introduction of new, non-indigenous species to aquatic aquaculture. [157268]

Mr. Morley: There has been no need to date to conduct research studies in order to operate the controls which the Government apply, under the Prohibition of Keeping or Release of Live Fish (Specified Species) Order 1998, to the introduction into the wild of non-native species of fish.

PRIME MINISTER

Ministerial Code of Conduct

Mr. Robathan: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his oral answer of 17 January 2001, Official Report, column 340, what advice he has received from the Parliamentary Commissioner for Standards regarding his ministerial code of conduct. [146655]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 22 January 2001]: I have nothing to add to my answer of 17 January.

Hollis Industries

Mr. Lilley: To ask the Prime Minister when No. 10 was advised that the inquiry into Hollis Industries contained evidence of £200,000 payable to the hon. Member for Coventry, North-West (Mr. Robinson). [157166]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 6 April 2001]: I refer the right hon. Member to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry's reply to the hon. Member for Lewes (Mr. Baker) on 2 April 2001, Official Report, columns 5–6W, which sets out the facts relating to the conduct of the 1999 investigation into companies associated with my hon. Friend the Member for Coventry, North-West (Mr. Robinson) (principally Hollis Industries plc).

At no point were the contents of any papers or other documents obtained by the Department of Trade and Industry during the course of the investigation disclosed to No. 10.

Foot and Mouth

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Prime Minister if he has approved the transport to and entombment of animals from foot and mouth infected counties in landfill sites in foot and mouth free counties. [157753]

The Prime Minister: The disease eradication effort is organised on the basis of infected and non-infected areas, not county boundaries. Except in a few cases at the beginning of the outbreak, the policy has been to dispose of slaughtered animals within their infected areas, not to transport animals and carcases from infected to non-infected areas.

Mr. Paice: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his oral answer of 28 March 2001, Official Report, column 954, if he will provide a breakdown of the figure for sheep movements in February. [157512]

The Prime Minister: Sheep movements are not centrally recorded. We have refined the estimate which I provided on 28 March. We now estimate that around 2 million sheep movements took place in Great Britain in February, before movement restrictions were imposed. This is broken down as follows:

980,000 movements to abattoirs; some 845,000 clean sheep and 135,000 ewes were slaughtered in February.

700,000 movements through markets; based on an estimate provided by the Meat and Livestock Commission (MLC). This estimate does not include multiple movements through markets. Some animals will enter more than one market either because they are withdrawn, or not sold and taken home, or sold and re-sold (often as dealers split and mix loads of sheep from different sources so as to produce uniform consignments that meet specific buyers' requirements).

100,000 movements; through private sales between farmers or between farmers and dealers, which do not figure in any of the above categories.

30,000 movements leading to live export.

Other movements, including a limited number of movements between holdings or back from winter grazings, brings the total to around 2 million.

Mr. Beith: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list the changes in the handling of the foot and mouth outbreak which have resulted from his actions since he took personal charge of the matter. [157793]

The Prime Minister: The overriding priority since the outbreak was first discovered on 19 February has been to mobilise the resources and logistics required to control and eradicate the disease. This has been achieved by keeping the situation under constant review within Government, and by involving all Departments that have a positive role to play in the eradication strategy.

Doctors and Dentists Pay Review Body

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make an announcement regarding the Chair of the Doctors and Dentists Pay Review Body from 1 March. [158178]

The Prime Minister: I have appointed Mr. Michael Blair QC to be Chair of the Doctors and Dentists Pay Review Body from 1 March for a period of three years.

NORTHERN IRELAND

RUC

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many applications for early retirement and severance from the RUC have been turned down by the Chief Constable in the past three years, broken down by (a) perceived community origin, (b) gender, (c) police division, (d) membership of specialist units and (e) rank; and what the reasons were for turning down applications. [153819]

Mr. Ingram: No eligible officer has been turned down for voluntary severance/early retirement in the past three years.

HEALTH

Small Acute Hospitals

13. Mr. Andrew George: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what recent discussions he has had with the Royal College of Surgeons and the Royal College of Physicians regarding the clinical standards set in small acute hospitals. [156296]

Mr. Denham: Ministers regularly meet the Royal Colleges of Surgeons and Physicians. These colleges produce guidance on clinical standards in a wide variety of contexts. The NHS Plan sets out our intention to establish the Medical Education Standards Board to ensure that patient standards and the service needs of the NHS are fully aligned with the development of the curriculum and approval of training programmes.

Transplant Centres

14. Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he will announce his decision on the rationalisation of transplant centres. [156297]

Mr. Denham: Our decision will be announced in due course.

Placebo Medicines and Surgery

15. Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what recent investigations he has made into the outcomes of the use of placebo (a) medicines and (b) surgery. [156298]

Mr. Hutton: The Department, via the NHS Research and Development Health Technology Assessment Programme, funded a systematic review of the role of expectancies in the placebo effect and their use in the delivery of health care. The review was published as a monograph in March 1999, and a copy has been placed in the Library.

IVF Treatment

16. Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many requests for IVF treatment were granted in the last year for which figures are available in (a) Darlington, (b) Southampton, Itchen, (c) Barrow and Furness, (d) Pontefract and Castleford, (e) Birmingham, Edgbaston and (f) Colchester constituencies. [156299]

Yvette Cooper: The information requested is not available centrally. Parliamentary constituency and health authority boundaries are not coterminous. The Department published a report of a baseline survey it undertook of infertility services in the National Health Service in 1997. Copies are available in the Library.

Cancer

18. Mr. St. Aubyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what targets he has set with respect to improving cancer treatment. [156301]

Yvette Cooper: The cancer plan sets out targets for waiting times standards so that by 2005 there will be a maximum two month wait from urgent general practitioner referral to treatment for all cancers. Linked to this is the extension of the cancer services collaborative from April; and the introduction of booked admissions for cancer patients by 2004.

21. Mrs. Brinton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on his strategy to combat cancers in men. [156304]

Yvette Cooper: The cancer plan is a strategy to tackle all cancers in the whole population. The NHS prostate cancer programme sets out our aims to improve treatment and research in this area, which affects a significant number of men every year.

26. Mr. Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress is being made in delivering improved cancer services. [156309]

Yvette Cooper: Cancer services are receiving record levels of investment. For this financial year £255 million is available for the achievement of cancer targets and milestones. It will support the appointment of new consultants; implementation of the National Institute for Clinical Excellence guidance to end the postcode lottery of care; cutting waiting times for cancer and increasing National Health Service investment in specialist palliative care services.

34. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress is being made on reducing waiting times for cancer treatment. [156319]

Yvette Cooper: The National Health Service cancer plan published in September sets out new waiting time targets for cancer treatment which will be implemented over the next five years.

Since April 1999 over 140,000 women with suspected breast cancer have benefited by being referred urgently by their GP and offered an appointment with a specialist within two weeks. During 2000 this two week standard was rolled out for all patients with suspected cancer requiring urgent specialist investigation.

The cancer services collaborative (CSC) has demonstrated that by changing the way cancer services are provided, for example by pre-planning and pre-booking care, waiting times can be cut and a major impact can be made on cancer care. From 1 April 2001 the improvements in cancer care developed by the CSC are being rolled out to every cancer network in the country, supported by up to £15 million central funding to ensure the improvements are implemented throughout the country.

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what factors underlay the Government's estimate of the number of lives that will be saved from the Government's 10-year cancer plan target; and if he will make a statement. [156564]

Yvette Cooper: The "Saving Lives: Our Healthier Nation" White Paper published in July 1999 included a target to reduce the death rate from cancer in people under 75 by at least a fifth. Based on the assumption of steady improvement towards the target and the population characteristics present in 1997, it was estimated that achievement of the target would be associated with up to 100,000 lives saved over the period 1997 to 2010. Independent expert advice at this time suggested that 40 per cent. of the target reduction could come from improvements or extensions to screening programmes and better treatment, and 60 per cent. of the target reduction could be achieved through primary prevention such as reductions in smoking and improvements in fruit and vegetable consumption.

Health Inequalities (Halton)

19. Mr. Derek Twigg: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the allocation of resources to deal with health inequalities in Halton. [156302]

Yvette Cooper: The NHS plan says that by 2003, following review of the existing weighted capitation formula, reducing inequalities will be a key criterion for allocating NHS resources. While the review is undertaken, the "health inequalities" adjustment is being introduced for the year 2000–01 as a new non-recurrent allocation. North Cheshire health authority has received £1.15 million "health inequalities" adjustment, which will be used for the benefit of the residents of Halton and Warrington.

NHS Plan (Birmingham)

20. Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress is being made in implementing the NHS plan in Birmingham. [156303]

Yvette Cooper: The NHS plan is being integrated with the Birmingham health authority health improvement programme and service and financial framework programmes to ensure a coherent and consistent approach to delivering the plan.

Additionally, the Secretary of State recently approved a major hospital development in South Birmingham and development of an ambulatory care and diagnostic centre on the City Hospital site.

Bed Blocking (Essex)

22. Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will investigate the causes and consequences of bed blocking in Essex. [156305]

Mr. Denham: The causes and consequences of delayed discharge are dealt with locally as part of the winter planning process. Considerable work has been undertaken on this issue by North and South Essex health authorities and local authorities.

Primary Care Trusts

23. Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what recent representations he has received from doctors regarding the operation of primary care groups. [156306]

Mr. Denham: We have regular meetings with a range of organisations and receive feedback from primary care professionals on the operation of primary care groups. Primary care groups continue to provide a strong framework for doctors and nurses to support each other, and enable practices to innovate while ensuring that the benefits of innovation deliver high quality services for the whole local population.

35. Mr. Healey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the role of primary care trusts in relation to local mental health services. [156320]

Mr. Hutton: Where it is appropriate and a primary care trust (PCT) has the capacity to do so, it can directly provide mental health services to its population in a primary or community setting. Alternatively where it is appropriate for mental health services to be provided by another organisation such as a National Health Service mental health trust, the role of the PCT will be to commission the service from that trust.

The decision as to which role a PCT will play is one for each local health system following consultation on any proposals to change the way services may be provided. These proposals would be as a result of the clinical needs of their patients as determined through the implementation of the National Service Framework for mental health services and the NHS plan.

Mr. Bill O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action he is taking to increase the number of general practitioners to improve the services of primary care trusts; and if he will make a statement. [156300]

Mr. Denham: We have recently announced measures (including financial incentives) to encourage general practitioner recruitment and retention. The primary care workforce review, due to report shortly, is expected to include further recommendations on numbers of GPs and other staff and on ways of working to deliver the planned expansion of primary care.

Care for the Elderly

24. Mrs. Humble: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement about improving the standards of care for the elderly. [156307]

Mr. Hutton: We are determined that older people should receive higher standards of care from the NHS and social services. The National Service Framework for Older People, published on 27 March will deliver high quality health and social care, based on clinical and assessed need, not age. National minimum standards for care homes for older people, published on 2 March, will promote better quality care and help prevent abuse by grounding practice in the principles of dignity, choice, privacy and respect.

27. Mr. Heppell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress has been made in making intermediate care available to ensure that elderly people remain independent for as long as possible. [156310]

Mr. Hutton: The Government are committed to promoting older people's independence. Additional money this winter was focused primarily on intermediate and transitional care. Recent intermediate care guidance and the National Service Framework for Older People emphasise the importance of establishing intermediate care as a mainstream service and a development priority. Targets have been set to ensure continued progress, backed by significant extra funding announced in the NHS Plan.

Smoking

25. Mr. Ernie Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress is being made in preventing young people from taking up smoking. [156308]

Yvette Cooper: The most recent survey results indicate that smoking prevalence among children aged 11–15 is now at 9 per cent., down from 13 per cent. in 1996. This is very encouraging, but we are determined to ensure that this downward trend continues, for example by banning tobacco advertising, which particularly appeals to young people.

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress is being made in preventing young people from taking up smoking. [156293]

Yvette Cooper: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave my hon. Friend the Member for North-West Leicestershire (Mr. Taylor) on 10 April 2001, Official Report, column 842.

36. Dr. Iddon: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress his Department has made towards tackling smoking. [156321]

Yvette Cooper: We announced on 29 January 2001 a £3 million initiative to help co-ordinate locally all services for pregnant women who wish to give up smoking and on 14 March that we intend to amend the relevant regulations so as to allow doctors to prescribe any available nicotine replacement therapy as part of National Health Service treatment.

The Tobacco Advertising and Promotion Bill published on 14 December 2000 will ensure that tobacco is no longer promoted through advertising, sponsorship or other promotional schemes.

On 13 September 2000 we launched an enforcement protocol with local authorities to strengthen the enforcement of the existing legislation on under-age sales of cigarettes.

Respite Care

28. Mr. Fabricant: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on his policy towards the provision of respite care. [156312]

Mr. Hutton: Respite care is important because it helps older people and disabled people to live in the community, and it allows informal or family carers to have a break from caring. The extra resources which the Government have provided for the National Health Service and for social services mean that more people can benefit from respite care, in a domiciliary setting, in a residential care home or nursing home, or in hospital.

Waiting Lists (Southend Hospital)

29. Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress has been made in reducing waiting lists in Southend Hospital. [156313]

Mr. Denham: Significant progress has been made in reducing the waiting lists at Southend Hospital NHS Trust and it is working with primary care organisations to examine options for modifying referral patterns to help with this. The latest figures show that total number of patients waiting are about 4 per cent. below the end-March 1997 level.

Southend Hospital NHS Trust has made good progress with patients waiting over 12 months for treatment particularly in ophthalmology which contributed to over half of the waiting list last year.

Private Residential Nursing Homes

30. Mr. John Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to increase the use of private residential nursing homes by the NHS. [156314]

Mr. Hutton: We see an important role for the independent sector, working in partnership with the NHS and councils, in providing services and making best use of resources and facilities. A framework for closer partnership was set out in the Concordat between the National Health Service and the independent sector, "For the Benefit of Patients", signed on 31 October 2000. Intermediate care was one of three areas highlighted as a particular area for co-operation. Guidance issued earlier this year asked the NHS and councils to take into account the potential contribution of the voluntary and private sectors in providing intermediate care and, where appropriate, to develop services in partnership with independent providers. In order to help local health and social care partners to engage more effectively with the independent sector in the short term the Department has developed model contracts, available on the Department's website, as a basis for local contracts with independent providers.

Nursing homes can also be an appropriate setting in which people receive continuing health care fully funded by the NHS. Currently 10 per cent. of residents are fully funded by the NHS. It is, however, for local agencies to decide on the best way of providing services to meet the needs of local people.

Beta Interferon

31. Mr. Todd: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the costs of beta interferon to the NHS relative to those borne in other countries. [156316]

Mr. Denham: The Department has made no detailed assessment of the costs of beta interferon treatment in other countries. Direct comparisons of prices of products of this type can be misleading because they are often supplied direct to hospitals, making published list prices less significant. Furthermore some countries include distribution costs and some aspects of care within the list price while others account for them separately.

Pharmacists

32. Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress he has made in improving the use of pharmacists within the NHS. [156317]

Mr. Denham: On 12 September 2000 we published "Pharmacy in the Future—Implementing the National Plan" (a copy of which is available in the Library). This set out our programme for pharmacy in the National Health Service, to make better use of the skills and expertise of pharmacists.

We have since made good progress in implementing that programme. For example: on 18 October, we launched the first NHS Direct information points. 16 are located in community pharmacies; on 12 December, we launched the hospital medicines management performance framework, to make the best clinical and cost effective use of medicines and pharmacists' skills in hospitals; on 21 December we published the Health and Social Care Bill, which includes measures relating to the establishment of local pharmaceutical services and the extension of prescribing rights to new groups of health professionals, including pharmacists; and on 12 March we invited bids for the sites to take part in a national medicines management collaborative programme, a key step towards our target that by 2004 all primary care groups and trusts will have schemes so that people get more help from pharmacists in using their medicines.

Paddington Regeneration Partnership

33. Mr. Wilkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which members of Kensington, Chelsea and Westminster health authority attended meetings of the Paddington Regeneration Partnership from its inception to 13 July 2000. [156318]

Mr. Denham: The Kensington, Chelsea and Westminster health authority representative on the Paddington Regeneration Partnership from June 1998 to the present time has been Mr. Paul Mason. Mr. Mason is an assistant director and therefore not a board member of Kensington, Chelsea and Westminster health authority. He did, however, act up to the post of board level director for six months of the period in question.

Barnsley Health Authority

37. Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received about the end of year 2000–01 financial status of Barnsley health authority. [156322]

Yvette Cooper: For the financial year-end 2000–01, Barnsley health authority is expected to show an operational financial balance (OFB) underspend of £500,000 against its revenue resource limit of £173,646,000. This has been agreed and accepted by the Trent regional office of the National Health Service Executive and will be carried forward to be used in the financial year 2001–02.

Within the OFB surplus, there are a number of overspending budgets (including cost per case contracts, out of area placements for learning disability and continuing care), which are offset by underspending budgets, including community prescribing.

In terms of cash control, the health authority has exactly met its revenue and capital cash limits for the year.

Abattoirs

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the impact of the ban on pithing on the future of small abattoirs. [142890]

Ms Stuart [holding answer 18 December 2000]: I am advised on questions of food safety by the Food Standards Agency (FSA). The ban on pithing is a requirement of a recent European Union decision on specified risk material, which introduced new EU-wide rules for the protection of both human and animal health from the risks of BSE.

The FSA carried out a full public consultation on proposals to implement the pithing ban. All licensed red meat slaughterhouses were consulted. A number of the responses received raised concerns that many small abattoirs would be unable safely to slaughter animals without pithing unless structural changes to their premises were made and maintained that many of these would be unable to afford the costs of such changes.

The FSA agrees that changes in structure or equipment, as well as in working practices, may be needed to enable abattoirs to comply with a pithing ban without putting worker safety at risk. However, the FSA considers that alternatives to pithing should be available at reasonable cost in most cases and therefore sees no fundamental reason why the need to make such changes should affect the future of small abattoirs. Nevertheless the FSA is monitoring the introduction of the pithing ban in small abattoirs in order to ensure that any significant problems are reported and investigated.

HIV

Mr. Ian Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when the Government will publish a national strategy on HIV for public consultation. [144508]

Ms Stuart: The incorporation of the HIV strategy within an integrated sexual health and HIV strategy was announced in May 2000. This work is well advanced and should be ready for publication shortly.

Beef Imports

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if imported processed beef products are subject to the same checks for specified risk material contamination as imported carcase beef. [147856]

Ms Stuart [holding answer 30 January 2001]: I am advised by the Food Standards Agency (FSA) that all checks for specified risk material (SRM) contamination rely on a careful visual inspection of carcase meat to ensure that the specified tissues have been fully removed. A visual check for SRM contamination is not possible once meat has been processed. Advice on the safety of imported beef and beef products was issued by the FSA on 22 December.

Departmental Policies (Don Valley)

Caroline Flint: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will set out, with statistical information relating as directly as possible to Don Valley constituency, the effects on Doncaster of his Department's policies and actions since 2 May 1997. [153520]

Yvette Cooper: Detailed information on the impact of Department of Health policies nationally is set out in the Department of Health Annual Reports. A copy of the most recent report "Department of Health—Government Expenditure Plans 2000/01" is available in the Library and on the Department of Health website at www.doh.gov.uk/dhreport.

The impact of policies is not examined by constituency and statistics collected centrally by the Department are not collected on a constituency basis.

My hon. Friend's constituency falls within the geographical area covered by Doncaster health authority and Doncaster metropolitan borough council (MBC) social services.

Increases in allocations between 1996–97 and 2001–02 for Doncaster health authority are shown in the table.

Increases in allocations between 1996–97 and 2001–02

	Increase
£ million (cash)	62.7
£ million (real terms)	40.5
Percentage (cash)	39.51
Percentage (real terms)	23.61

Note:
Increases for 1999–2000 onwards are for unified allocations which cover hospital and community health services, prescribing and discretionary family health services. Those for previous years cover hospital and community health services only.

Doncaster health authority has also received additional funding for certain policies. This includes: £196,000 for accident and emergency modernisation between 1997–98 and 2000–01; A further £836,000 has been invested in an existing scheme to modernise the layout of the accident and emergency at Doncaster Royal Infirmary; £47,000, £130,000, £213,000 and £139,000 for improving cancer services (breast, colorectal, lung and cancer outpatients) in 1997–98, 1998–99, 1999–2000 and 2000–01 respectively; £5.004 million to reduce waiting lists and times between 1997–98 and 2000–01; £1.294 million to expand critical care services in 2000–01; £250,000 to deal with winter pressures and delayed discharges in 2000–01; £131,000 for heart disease services between 1997–98 and 2000–01; and £115,400 invested in dentistry between 1997–98 and 2000–01.

This includes: £56,000, £150,000, £304,000 and £204,000 for improving cancer services (breast, colorectal, lung and cancer outpatients) in 1997–98, 1998–99, 1999–2000 and 2000–01 respectively; £7.898 million to reduce waiting lists and times between 1997–98 and 2000–01; £541,000 to expand critical care services in 2000–01; £265,000 to deal with winter pressures and delayed discharges in 2000–01; £192,000 for heart disease services between 1997–98 and 2000–01; £136,400 invested in dentistry between 1997–98 and 2000–01.

In addition, my hon. Friend's constituents will benefit from a major hospital development scheme costing £177 million which will see acute hospital services centralised on the Derby City General Hospital site and the development of the Derbyshire Royal Infirmary as a community hospital. The development is being funded through the Private Finance Initiative.

Southern Derbyshire also received £1.2 million of Special Assistance Funding for reconfiguration and restructuring of services in 1999–2000.

GP Budgets

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the average GP budget was in (a) May 1997 and (b) in the most recent financial year for which figures are available in Shrewsbury and Atcham; and if he will make a statement. [156498]

Yvette Cooper: Information is not collected centrally in regard to individual general practitioner's budgets.

Indeed, as independent contractors, GPs do not receive budgets as such. Also, because of variations such as list size, age of patients and environmental and health factors, as well as changes to the way in which moneys are allocated, it would be difficult to produce meaningful statistics for comparative purposes.

"Feet First" Report

Mr. Stunell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he will publish the review of the "Feet First" report; and if he will make a statement. [155579]

Mr. Hutton: "Meeting the Challenge: A Strategy for the Allied Health professions", published on 15 November 2000, raises the profile of chiropody and podiatry services alongside other health professions, and we have no current plans to publish the specific review of the "Feet First" report. Its impact has been to ensure that the significance of chiropody services informs policy development. For example, there is professional chiropody/podiatry involvement in the Expert Reference Group, and sub groups of the Diabetes National Standards Framework and the Department is also working with the Society on the new Allied Health Professions consultant role and the workforce review. The review of evidence based literature in Feet First Review has been made available to the Society of Chiropodists and Podiatrists for dissemination. There will be a ministerial meeting with the Society on 30 April.

Royal Shrewsbury Hospital

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when it was originally planned that the cobalt radiotherapy unit would be phased out at the Royal Shrewsbury Hospital; when he expects the new linear accelerator unit to be treating patients at the hospital; and if he will make a statement. [156495]

Yvette Cooper: In August 2000 the Royal Shrewsbury Hospital National Health Service Trust's business case for the provision of a second linear accelerator service to replace the existing cobalt unit was approved.

The new linear accelerator is expected to begin treating patients in spring 2002, forming part of the trust's plan to improve cancer services.

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients (a) in May 1997 and (b) on the most recent date for which information is available were treated at the Royal Shrewsbury hospital in mixed sex wards; and if he will make a statement. [156500]

Yvette Cooper: Information on the number of patients treated in mixed sex wards is not collected centrally.

We have set three specific objectives to eliminate mixed sex accommodation:

ensuring that appropriate organisational arrangements are in place to secure good standards of privacy and dignity for hospital patients; achieving fully the patient's charter standard for segregated washing and toilet facilities across the National Health Service; and providing safe facilities for patients in hospital who are mentally ill which safeguard their privacy and dignity.

The audit of single sex accommodation (30 September 2000) showed that the Royal Shrewsbury Hospital NHS Trust had achieved these three objectives.

Meningitis C

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will estimate the number of people who have received vaccination against group C meningitis in Shrewsbury and Atcham in the last three years; and if he will make a statement. [156499]

Yvette Cooper: The new meningitis C vaccine became available in autumn 1999 and was introduced into the routine childhood immunisation programme given at age two, three and four months in November 1999. A 'catch-up' campaign to offer vaccine to all those under the age of 18 years not covered by the routine programme was also undertaken from that date.

Information on the number of children immunised during the catch-up campaign will be available shortly and will be published in the Communicable Disease Surveillance Centre's "Communicable Disease Report". The most recent coverage figures by regional health authority for the routine meningitis C programme were published in the "Communicable Disease Report" (Vol.11, No. 12, 22 March 2001). In Shropshire health authority area—which includes Shrewsbury and Atcham—an estimated 1,780 children had received the vaccine through the routine programme due at two, three and four months by December 2000.

Free Dental Treatment

Mr. Blizzard: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will introduce free dental treatment for all people over 75 years of age. [157157]

Mr. Hutton: We have no plans to introduce free dental treatment for all people over 75 years of age; we believe that it is a better use of limited resources to base help with charges for NHS dentistry on the individual's ability to pay, so ensuring help is focused on those who need it most. Pensioners who get Income Support pay nothing for their dental treatment and under the National Health Service low income scheme some are entitled to free treatment, while others, who are not entitled to full remission of charges, can get partial help.

Continence Pads

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidelines exist to prevent the repackaging of continence pads that have been opened after sterilisation. [R] [156658]

Mr. Hutton [holding answer 2 April 2001]: Continence pads are not required to be supplied sterile. Providing basic hygiene procedures are followed; for example, hand washing; patients' health should not be compromised from splitting bulk packs of continence pads.

"Good Practice in Continence Services" introduced by PL/CMO/2000/2, was issued in April 2000.

Bed Numbers (Northumberland)

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many beds were available in the National Health Service in each year since 1997 in (a) Northumberland health authority and (b) Cheviot and Wansbeck Hospital. [157293]

Mr. Hutton: Information on bed numbers is collected annually from National Health Service trusts and not by individual hospital or health authority. The table shows the average daily number of available beds in NHS trusts within Northumberland health authority.

Premature Babies

Mrs. Fitzsimons: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what measures are in place to prevent premature babies contracting respiratory infections which are common amongst such babies. [157231]

Yvette Cooper: Research indicates that pre-term babies are more susceptible to severe respiratory illness than healthy full term babies. The illness is often caused by respiratory syncytial virus (RSV), for which there is at present no active vaccine. However there is increasing use of an immune globulin, which can be given by injectioneach month, to try to prevent this illness in very vulnerable babies.

Travel Grants (Australia)

Mr. Grogan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many travel grants have been made to fund visits to Britain by former child migrants to Australia; [157236]

(2) what the total cost is of travel grants made from the Special Travel Fund set up to finance a single visit to see family members in Britain by former child migrants to Australia. [157235]

Mr. Hutton: As at 31 March 2001, 126 former child migrants have travelled from Australia with assistance from the Government funded Child Migrant Support Fund. The total cost of their travel/subsistence was £214,000.

Fourth Transplant Unit

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list those (a) hon. Members and (b) others who have made representations to his Department seeking a delay in the announcement of the fourth transplant unit to remain in operation after 1 April 2002. [156683]

Mr. Denham: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has received no representations from anyone seeking to delay the announcement of the site of the fourth national cardiothoracic transplant centre.

Tuberculosis

Dr. Fox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many cases of TB were reported in the UK in (a) 1999 and (b) 2000. [157871]

Yvette Cooper: The number of reported cases for all types of tuberculosis in the United Kingdom for 1999 was 6,701 and 7,264 (provisional) for 2000.

This information is publicly available. Information for England and Wales is published on the PHLS website (www.phls.org.uk), Scotland publish their data in the Scottish Health Statistics booklet and Northern Ireland publish their data via their Communicable Disease Surveillance Centre.

Dr. Fox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many cases of drug resistant TB were reported in the UK in (a) 1999 and (b) 2000. [157870]

Yvette Cooper: The 1998 Public Health Laboratory Service tuberculosis survey found that there has been no increase in the proportion of strains of TB resistant to one or more of the standard anti-TB drugs since 1994. The United Kingdom has heightened its surveillance of drug and multi-drug resistant TB through a scheme co-ordinated by the PHLS, through the UK Mycobacterial Resistance Network or MYCOBNET.

Information taken from MYCOBNET shows that 33 cases of drug resistant tuberculosis (ie resistant to standard antibiotic drugs) were reported in the UK in 1999 and 36 (provisional figure) in 2000. These figures show a slight decrease in the number from previous years, which have averaged at 49 cases per year since 1994.

Bed Blocking and Surgery Cancellations

Mr. Gale: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the impact of closures within the private nursing home and residential care sector on bed blocking and cancellation of elective surgery in National Health Service hospitals. [156311]

Mr. Hutton: We are providing new intermediate care services, which will enable patients to move on from hospital with minimal delay and we provided last year, an extra 523 adult critical care beds to expand post operative capacity. The Department is working to develop a new concordat with the care home sector to maintain capacity and stability in the sector. These initiatives mean that delays in hospital discharge are beginning to reduce.

Correspondence

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) when he will reply to the letter sent to him on 18 December by the hon. Member for North-East Derbyshire, reference Part 3 5120/99; [149116]

(2) when the hon. Member for North-East Derbyshire will receive replies to his letters concerning a constituent, dated 13 November 2000, 18 December 2000, 13 February, 20 February and 21 February. [155604]

Yvette Cooper: I apologise for the delay in replying to my hon. Friend's correspondence and subsequent parliamentary questions. The reasons are that a number of sensitive issues have been raised which require thorough investigation to ensure a full explanation can be given. I have met my hon. Friend to discuss these issues further.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Wilkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he will give a substantive answer to the question tabled on 28 March by the hon. Member for Ruislip-Northwood on isolation wards for tuberculosis in NHS hospitals. [157958]

Yvette Cooper: I replied to the hon. Member's question, tabled for answer on 2 April, on 6 April.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Single Room Rent

Ms Buck: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, (1) pursuant to his answer on 23 March 2001, Official Report, column 370W, what consideration was given to providing additional exemptions from the proposed new Younger Person's Rent regulations for (a) young pregnant women, (b) young people in receipt of the disability working allowance and incapacity benefit, (c) young people considered vulnerable under Part VII of the Housing Act 1996, (d) care leavers under the age of 25 years and (e) young people rehoused through resettlement programmes operated by the Rough Sleepers Unit and others; [156723]

(2) pursuant to his answer of 23 March 2001, Official Report, column 370W, what consideration was given to including accommodation in which a small kitchen is provided within the definition of the proposed new Younger Person's Rent. [156724]

Angela Eagle: The existing exemptions from the single room rent will remain in force when the broader definition of the single room rent is implemented from July this year. We have no current plans to increase the number of exemptions. However, local authorities will have the discretion to provide additional support in individual cases where there is a shortfall in rent under the new arrangements for discretionary housing payments, which will also be implemented from July. The broader definition of the single room rent retains the use of a kitchen, but only where it is shared.

Ms Buck: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many (a) young people have ceased to claim housing benefit for private sector accommodation since the introduction of the single room rent and (b) more young people are likely to claim housing benefit for private sector accommodation under the proposed new Younger Person's Rent regulations; [156708]

(2), pursuant to his answer of 23 March 2001, Official Report, column 370W, how much has been saved in housing benefit payments since the introduction of the single room rent; and what costings his Department have undertaken in relation to the proposed new Younger Person's Rent regulations. [156720]

Angela Eagle: It is not possible to quantify accurately the numbers of people who move on or off Housing Benefit solely because of changes to the benefit rules. There are many other factors including employment conditions which will influence whether a person claims benefit.

However, our approximate estimate is that about 25,000 fewer people are receiving Housing Benefit than if the single room rent had not been introduced. This represents an estimated reduction in Housing Benefit expenditure of £65 million a year.

Around 5,000 young people are expected to flow back on to Housing Benefit each year following the introduction of the broader definition of the single room rent in July this year. The estimated additional cost in 2001–02 is £20 million.

Ms Buck: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 23 March 2001, Official Report, column 370W, what assessment has been made of (a) the likely impact of the proposed younger person's rent regulations in areas where there is a shortage of shared accommodation available to young people, (b) the number of additional units of accommodation that may become available in England as a result of the proposed younger person's rent regulations and (c) the likely impact of the proposed new younger person's rent regulations on shortfalls faced by young people between rent due and Housing Benefit paid. [156721]

Angela Eagle: Our objectives for the single room rent are to ensure that young people have access to accommodation so that they can concentrate on finding work, balanced against our aim of making sure that the benefit system does not provide out of work young adults with better housing than their working peers could afford.

We made these objectives clear in our Housing Green Paper, "Quality and Choice: A decent home for all" on which we consulted widely in order to assess the potential impact of our proposals. We received representations from a number of different organisations concerning the operation of the single room rent rules and these were taken into consideration. The new rules from July this year are designed to better reflect what the market generally has to offer on a national basis.

Local authorities will have the discretion to provide additional support in individual cases where there is a shortfall in rent under the new arrangements for discretionary housing payments, which will also be implemented from July.

Ms Buck: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what assessment he has made of (a) changes in the behaviour of young people following the introduction of the single room rent; and (b) the likely impact of the proposed new younger person's rent on the behaviour of young people; and what plans he has to monitor the behaviour of young people under the proposed new younger person's rent. [156709]

(2) pursuant to his answer on 23 March 2001, Official Report, column 370W, on single room rent, what plans his Department has to commission research into the impact of the proposed new Younger Person's Rent regulations. [156707]

Angela Eagle: In 1997, together with the Department of the Environment Transport and Regions (DETR) we commissioned the London Research Centre to explore the role of Housing Benefit in the private rented sector. The report entitled "Housing Benefit and the Private Rented Sector" was published by DETR in 1999.

The report concluded that the single room rent restriction was causing difficulties for some young people under 25 in accessing and retaining accommodation. Our broadening of the definition of the single room rent from July this year will better reflect what the market has to offer. This is designed to ease the problem faced by young people in obtaining accommodation, so that they can concentrate their efforts on finding work.

We are currently considering the possibility of research examining the impact of broadening the single room rent and will reach a decision in due course.

Ms Buck: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 23 March 2001, Official Report, column 370W, on single room rent, how many exceptional hardship payments have been awarded to young people subject to the single room rent in each of the last three years. [156710]

Angela Eagle: The information requested is not available.

Ms Buck: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 23 March 2001, Official Report, column 370W, what assessment has been made of (a) the number of young people who will be unable to find accommodation matching the definition in the proposed new Younger Person's Rent regulations, and (b) the number of young people who will be forced to move away from their local authority area to find accommodation matching the definition in the proposed new Younger Person's Rent regulations. [156722]

Angela Eagle: The information required to make such assessments is not available. The Rent Service has confirmed that, in general, the market is active in providing shared accommodation to young people within the broader definition of the single room rent we are introducing from July this year. We do not hold information about an individual's accommodation unless they make a claim to benefit. This information would not identify whether an individual had previously been seeking accommodation in their own or other localities.

Ms Buck: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, (1) pursuant to his answer of 23 March 2001, Official Report, column 370W, what consideration was given to consulting more widely than the local authority associations on the proposed new Younger Person's Rent regulations; [156715]

(2) pursuant to his answer of 23 March 2001, Official Report, column 370W, what advice his Department sought from the Rent Service in relation to the proposed new Younger Person's Rent regulations; and if he will place this advice in the Library; [156719]

(3) pursuant to his answer of 23 March 2001, Official Report, column 370W, if correspondence from his Department to the Social Security Advisory Committee concerned possible consultations on the proposed new Younger Person's Rent regulations; and if he will place a copy of that correspondence in the Library; [156717]

(4) pursuant to his answer of 23 March 2001, Official Report, column 370W, what representations the Social Security Advisory Committee have received on the proposed new Younger Person's Rent regulations; [156716]

(5) what recent representations his Department has received in relation to review of the definition of the single room rent; [156706]

(6) pursuant to his answer of 23 March 2001, Official Report, column 370W, what consultations have taken place between his Department and Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions in relation to the proposed new Younger Person's Rent regulations. [156718]

Angela Eagle: In order to implement these changes as early and simply as possible, we have decided to retain the term "Single Room Rent". This will avoid, among other things, costly changes to computer software for local authorities and rent officers. Our objectives for the single room rent are to ensure that young people have access to accommodation so that they can concentrate on finding work, balanced against our aim of making sure that the benefit system does not provide out of work young adults with better housing than their working peers could afford. We made these objectives clear, including the option of broadening the definition of the single room rent, in our Housing Green Paper "Quality and Choice: A decent home for all" on which we consulted widely. Our response to the consultation said that we will proceed with broadening the definition so as to enable young people to access and maintain accommodation and to encourage landlords to rent to young people.

In addition to consulting the Local Authority Associations the draft legislation was seen by the Social Security Advisory Committee. I will arrange for a copy of the relevant correspondence to the Committee to be placed in the Library. The Committee did not request the formal referral of the regulations.

The Committee may report on proposals for regulations to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State following public consultation exercises, but it is otherwise not under any duty to routinely inform my right hon. Friend of representations it may receive from time to time. In response to inquiries, officials have been informed that the Committee received one representation, from Shelter.

In developing the proposal to broaden the definition of the single room rent we did not seek comprehensive written advice, but we had detailed discussions with officials from the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions, the Scottish Executive and the National Assembly for Wales, as well as the Rent Service and rent officers from Scotland and Wales. The new definition takes account of these discussions and is based on a sample analysis of rental data which shows that most young people tend to share accommodation. Comments on the draft legislation were sought from these interested parties. We have received further recent representations on our proposal from Barnardos, the Association of Housing Advisory services and the National Private Landlord and Tenant Working Group.

Winter Fuel Payments

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what delays there have been in the payment of the 2000–01 Winter Fuel Payment. [157057]

Mr. Rooker: Over 11 million Winter Fuel Payments have been made so far. For both automatically processed cases and claims, payments were made before Christmas where entitlements were established by 9 November 2000.

We continue to process claims received after 9 November 2000. The timing of payments made depends on when people choose to send in their claims and whether they are completed correctly.

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the monetary value of unclaimed Winter Fuel Payments by men aged 60–64 for the (a) 1997–98, (b) 1998–99 and (c) 1999–2000 winters. [157054]

Mr. Rooker: It is not possible to provide a reliable estimate of the monetary value of unclaimed Winter Fuel Payments by men aged 60–64 in respect of winters 1997–98; 1998–99 and 1999–2000.

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the monetary value of unclaimed 2000–01 Winter Fuel Payments by newly eligible men by 30 March. [157056]

Mr. Rooker: It is not possible to provide a reliable estimate of the monetary value of unclaimed Winter Fuel Payments by newly eligible men in respect of winter 2000–01.

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the number of men aged 60–64 who made an (a) successful and (b) unsuccessful claim for the (i) 1997–98, (ii) 1998–99 and (iii) 1999–2000 Winter Fuel Payment. [157053]

Mr. Rooker: The administration of benefits is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency, Alexis Cleveland. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Alexis Cleveland to Mr. Steve Webb, dated 9 April 2001:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking if he will estimate the number of men aged 60–64 that made an (a) successful and (b) unsuccessful claim for the 1997/98, 1998/99, 1999/00 winter fuel payment.

As of 3 April 2001, 1,046,020 claims for Winter Fuel Payments in respect of retrospective year's 1997–98, 1998–99 and 1999–2000 had been processed for males. Information relating solely to men aged 60–64 cannot be provided.

The decisions made following the ruling by the European Court of Justice meant that the majority of people newly eligible would be men aged 60–64. However, people over state pension age but who had not received a Winter Fuel Payment before because they were not getting a qualifying benefit were also brought into the scheme.

Current records show that we have received over 1 million claims in respect of past winters from men of which around 85,000 were unsuccessful, in the first instance. If a customer feels that the decision on their claim is incorrect they can ask for it to be looked at again. We do not hold statistics on successful claims following such reconsiderations.

I hope this is helpful.

Mr. Simon Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what the average length of time is from the receipt of application for back-dated winter fuel allowance to be paid. [156343]

Mr. Rooker: This is a matter for Alexis Cleveland, the Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Alexis Cleveland to Mr. Simon Thomas, dated 10 April 2001:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking what the average length of time is from the receipt of application for backdated winter fuel allowance to be paid.

The average length of time taken to process a backdated claim from date of receipt to date of payment is not available. However, I can inform you that over 90% of claims for the financial years 1997/98, 1998/99 and 1999/00 have been processed without the need for further investigation. In these circumstances claims are paid within five weeks of receiving the application form.

The remaining claims require further investigation and inevitably take longer to clear. Where only minimal investigation is required, claims may still be paid in five weeks.

I hope this is helpful.

Pensions

Mr. Davidson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what progress is being made in reforming the regulations in the social security system governing capital limits for pensioners. [156573]

Mr. Rooker: This month, the lower capital limit in the income related benefits, such as Housing Benefit and Council Tax Benefit, for those over 60 increases from £3,000 to £6,000. In addition, the upper limit of £8,000 in the Minimum Income Guarantee (MIG) and Jobseeker's Allowance for those over 60 rises to £12,000. These changes to capital limits will better reward savers with low incomes and will benefit around half a million pensioners by £5 a week, on average.

Under the proposals for the Pension Credit, the capital rules will be abolished and instead income from capital will be considered.

Benefit Regulation Circulars

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many Housing Benefit and Council Tax Benefit regulations and operations and adjudications circulars have been issued in each year since 1992. [152441]

Angela Eagle: The information is in the table.

The numbers of Housing Benefit and Council Tax Benefit regulations and operations and adjudications circulars identified as being issued since 1992

	Regulations	Circulars
1992	12	35
1993	12	46
1994	10	34
1995	13	58
1996	16	57
1997	19	83
1998	15	89
1999	15	81
2000	23	73
2001	7	22

Notes:
1. The Statutory Instruments counted are those which contain one or more regulations on the subject of Housing Benefit, Council Tax Benefit and/or Community Charge Benefit.
2. Statutory Instruments including only orders and schemes are not included in the list.

Departmental Employees (Scotland)

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people were employed in each pay grade and what the average salary per grade was for (a) full-time and (b) part-time employees working for his Department in (i) Scotland and (ii) the UK in the (A) 1998–99, (B) 1999–2000 and (C) 2000–01 financial years. [155086]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 23 March 2001]: The information has been placed in the Library. Staff employed by the Department in Scotland provide services for claimants in all parts of the UK—for example, Glasgow Benefit Centre provides a service for customers in specified parts of London. Similarly, claimants in Scotland are supported by services provided by staff located outside Scotland—for example, the Child Benefit Directorate in the North-East of England serves the whole of the UK.

Regulations

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list each change to Social Security regulations since May 1997. [151451]

Mr. Rooker: The information has been placed in the Library.

There were 241 Regulations changed in the period May 1992 to April 1997.

Minimum Income Guarantee

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to the oral statement of 2 April 2001,

Official Report, column 11, by the right hon. Member for Birmingham, Perry Barr (Mr. Rooker), on the take up of the Minimum Income Guarantee, for what reason he described the figure extrapolated by his Department from its survey of take-up as a hocus-pocus figure. [157148]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 6 April 2001]: In my answer to the hon. Member for Havant (Mr. Willetts) I described the figure as legitimate. However, as the survey states,

"care should be taken in interpreting the take-up statistics".

The figure is only a projection of potential pensioners not taking-up their entitlement to the Minimum Income Guarantee (MIG). We have taken note of the survey, and gone one step further—we have contacted over 2 million real, identifiable, pensioners in writing as part of this Government's national MIG take-up campaign and so far 930,000 have responded. We have identified from the responses two main reasons for unsuccessful claims—too much income and/or too much capital. More pensioners will become entitled to MIG with this April's increases in the capital limits and with the introduction of Pension Credit we will abolish the capital limits and for the first time reward those with savings income.

Means-tested Benefits

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 2 April 2001, Official Report, column 17, on means-tested benefits, to what the figure of 9 per cent. refers; what proportion of middle income pensioners are on means-tested benefits; and what will be the proportion from 2003. [157543]

Mr. Rooker: The 9 per cent. figure represents overall current spending on income-related benefits as a proportion of total benefit expenditure, for people aged 60 and over, the same as it was in 1997. In 1998–99 30 per cent. of pensioner benefit units in the middle four income deciles were in receipt of Income Related Benefits after Housing Costs have been taken into account, for the middle two income deciles the figure was 28 per cent. By way of comparison the figures for 1996–97 were 32 per cent. and 30 per cent. respectively. The corresponding information for 2003 is not available.

Disability Living Allowance

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 20 March 2001, Official Report, column 204W, how many applications for Disability Living Allowance were received in each quarter of the last three years; how many of these were (a) successful, (b) unsuccessful, (c) subject to review, (d) successful at review, (e) unsuccessful at review, (f) subject to reconsideration, (g) successful at reconsideration, (h) unsuccessful at reconsideration, (i) subject to supersession, (j) successful at supersession, (k) unsuccessful at supersession, (l) subject to appeal, (m) successful at appeal and (n) unsuccessful at appeal; what the average number of days taken was to process applications; and how many decisions had not been reached at the end of each quarter for (i) first claim, (ii) renewal, (iii) review, (iv) reconsideration, (v) supersession and (iv) appeal stages. [157424]

Mr. Bayley: Available information is in the tables.

The number of people who receive Disability Living Allowance continues to increase. Significant backlogs of work accrued in the processing of these benefits last year, because of the growing caseload and introduction of a new system of decision making and appeals. The Benefits Agency tackled the backlog as a priority and it has now been substantially cleared. The continuing high level of appeals outstanding reflects the increase in the numbers received following the introduction of the new procedures.

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many complaints have been received about the Benefits Agency regarding claims to Disability Living Allowance for each month since May 1997. [155416]

Mr. Bayley: The administration of Disability Living Allowance is a matter for Alexis Cleveland, Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Alexis Cleveland to Mr. David Willetts, dated 10 April 2001:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking how many complaints have been received about the Benefits Agency regarding claims to Disability Living Allowance for each month since May 1997.

Information is not available for the period prior to April 1998. From April 1998, the number of complaints made in respect of Disability Living Allowance by letter, telephone or in person is in the table.

April	176	505	1,141
May	158	679	1,262
June	258	909	1,569

December	270	962	530
January	337	886	791
February	419	961	614
March	407	1,284	'—

[1] Figures for March 2001 are not yet available

It should be noted that while the statistics show the number of all types of complaints about the standard of service received, they also include cases in which dissatisfaction has been expressed with the outcome of benefit decisions which must be pursued through the decision making and appeals process.

There was a steady increase in the figures throughout the period up to June 2000. This can be attributed to an increase in work on hand before and after the introduction of new decision making and appeals procedures. It is well-documented that changes to Disability Living Allowance procedures introduced in October 1999 led initially to a significant increase in the time taken to process each case. This created a temporary backlog of work, which resulted in an increase in the number of complaints. The backlog was tackled as a priority and has now been cleared with the result that the level of complaints have steadily decreased each month since July 2000.

I hope this information is helpful.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will give a breakdown in number and relevant percentage of the DLA decisions on (a) the number of claims received in (i) 1999 and (ii) 2000, (b) the number which went to appeal in (i) 1999 and (ii) 2000, and the number which were turned down, (c) the number which went to tribunal in (i) 1999 and (ii) 2000 and in each year how many were turned down and (d) the average time it took for a decision to be taken (i) initially, (ii) on appeal and (iii) on further appeal to the tribunal in (A) 1999 and (B) 2000. [157983]

Foot and Mouth

Mr. Todd: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will review Social Fund adequacy and availability for those affected by foot and mouth disease. [157594]

Angela Eagle: I refer my hon. Friend to the written answer from my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State to my hon. Friend the Member for Doncaster, Central (Ms Winterton) on 30 March 2001, Official Report, column 795W.

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make it his policy (a) to review eligibility for Working Families Tax Credit and other benefits to take account of short-term drops in income as a result of the foot and mouth outbreak and (b) to make representation to the Chancellor of the Exchequer to disregard as income on savings any compensation payments paid by the Ministry of Agriculture Fisheries and Food whose purpose is to finance restocking of farms. [157837]

Dawn Primarolo: I have been asked to reply.

A new leaflet, WK11, "Foot and Mouth—Financial help you may get if your employment has been disrupted" has been produced to explain the financial help available to people, via the benefit and tax credit systems, whose employment or business is disrupted because of the foot and mouth outbreak. The leaflet is now available on the DSS website and stocks are being issued to local Benefits Agency offices, local authorities and other agencies in affected areas.

Compensation for the loss of a farmer's stock is treated as a business asset and will be disregarded when estimating income from personal capital.

Porton Down

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many former service personnel and members of their families have made appeals to the pensions appeal tribunals since 1 January 1999 regarding claims for disablement arising out of experiments at the Chemical Defence Establishment at Porton Down; and how many such appeals have been (a) approved and (b) rejected. [157303]

Mr. Bayley: The information is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Prisoners of War

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many applications for compensation by former POWs held in Japan have yet to be processed. [157518]

Mr. Bayley [holding answer 9 April 2001]: As at 6 April 2001, 18,302 payments have been issued and 5,629 applications are awaiting determination.

Departmental Policies (Ribble Valley)

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will set out, with statistical information relating as directly as possible to the Ribble Valley constituency, the effects on Ribble Valley of his Department's policies and actions since 2 May 1997. [157844]

Mr. Rooker: The Department's policies and initiatives have made a significant contribution to the Government's overall objectives of:

Eradicating child poverty in 20 years, and halving it within 10;

Promoting work as the best form of welfare for people of working age while protecting the position of those in greatest need; and,

Combating poverty and promoting security and independence in retirement for today's and tomorrow's pensioners.

These goals are being pursued nationwide and our achievements are set out in our annual "Opportunity for all" reports. Our second report, "Opportunity for all—One year on: making a difference" (CM4865, September 2000) sets out what progress has been made in the past year, as well as highlighting what more needs to be done. Nationwide statistical information is necessarily more complete than data at a local authority level, but the following provides a comparative guide to the effect of the Department's policies and actions in Ribble Valley since May 1997.

Measures in our five Budgets so far will lift over 1.2 million children nationally out of poverty. These include record increases to Child Benefit, the introduction of the Working Families Tax Credit, increases in the income-related benefits, the minimum wage and tax changes.

Child Benefit will be worth £15.50 a week for the eldest child and £10.35 a week for other children from April 2001: nationally about 7 million families receive Child Benefit, and in Ribble Valley 11,475 families benefit.

We now have the lowest unemployment rate in 25 years. The New Deals have helped lone parents, the young unemployed, the long-term unemployed, the over 50s and partners of the unemployed to move from benefit into work. In the period since May 1997 the number of people claiming Jobseeker's Allowance nationally has reduced from 1,562,400 to 960,600; in Ribble Valley the number has reduced from 1,200 to under 500. Since May 1997 the number of lone parents who claim Income Support has decreased from 1,013,500 to 894,100 nationally; in Ribble Valley the number has increased from 500 to 600.

Older people are disproportionately affected by fuel poverty. So we have introduced Winter Fuel Payments to help with their heaviest fuel bill. This winter, the payment is £200 for households who qualify. Around 19,500 older people in Ribble Valley have received a Winter Fuel Payment for this winter (2000–01).

To demonstrate our commitment to combating pensioner poverty, this year we will spend £4.5 billion extra in real terms on pensioners. Some 18,800 pensioners in Ribble Valley will benefit from the substantial increases in the basic State Pension this April and next; this year's increase is £5 a week for single pensioners and £8 for couples. In addition we have introduced free TV licences for the over 75s of whom we estimate there are about 7,500 in Ribble Valley. 2,100 pensioner families in Ribble Valley are receiving the Minimum Income Guarantee, which we introduced in April 1999 to help our poorest pensioners. From April they will be at least £15 a week, or £800 a year, better off in real terms as a result of Government measures since 1997.

Other reforms in the pipeline include: the new Pension Credit in 2003 designed to ensure that pensioners benefit from their savings; the launch of Stakeholder Pensions in April this year; and the introduction of the State Second Pension in April 2002 both of which will help provide greater security for tomorrow's pensioners.

Departmental Policies (Tiverton and Honiton)

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will set out, with statistical information relating as directly as possible to the Tiverton and Honiton constituency, the effects on Tiverton and Honiton of his Department's policies and actions since 2 May 1997. [157810]

Mr. Rooker: The Department's policies and initiatives have made a significant contribution to the Government's overall objectives of:

Eradicating child poverty in 20 years, and halving it within 10;

Since May 1997 the number of lone parents who claim Income Support has decreased from 1,013,500 to 894,100 nationally and in Tiverton and Honiton from 1,100 to 800.

Older people are disproportionately affected by fuel poverty. So we have introduced Winter Fuel Payments to help with their heaviest fuel bill. This winter, the payment is £200 for households who qualify. Around 24,200 older people in Tiverton and Honiton have received a Winter Fuel Payment for this winter (2000–01).

To demonstrate our commitment to combating pensioner poverty, this year we will spend £4.5 billion extra in real terms on pensioners. Some 22,500 pensioners in Tiverton and Honiton will benefit from the substantial increases in the basic State pension this April and next; this year's increase is £5 a week for single pensioners and £8 for couples. In addition we have introduced free TV licences for the over 75s of whom we estimate there are about 9,900 in Tiverton and Honiton. 2,600 pensioner families in Tiverton and Honiton are receiving the Minimum Income Guarantee, which we introduced in April 1999 to help our poorest pensioners. Home Visits

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 4 April 2001, Official Report, column 204W, on home visits, if he will provide information on a comparable basis on the numbers of home visits in each of the last five years. [157584]

Angela Eagle [holding answer 9 April 2001]: Information is available from April 1996. The number of visits made is as follows:

Year	Number of visits
1996–97	785,126
1997–98	483,692
1998–99	475,550

Income Support

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the amount by which the reduction in Social Security spending in London was attributable to changes in the number of (a) people unemployed and (b) lone parents on Income Support in each year since 1996. [157141]

Mr. Bayley [holding answer 9 April 2001]: The estimated reductions in Social Security spending in London each year compared to a baseline of 1996–97 expenditure are shown in the table.

Occupational Pensions

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many occupational pension schemes were (a) opened, (b) closed and (c) wound-up in each year between 1979 and 2000. [157073]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 9 April 2001]: The information requested is in the table.

Significant fluctuations in the number of occupational pension schemes opened, closed and wound up in any particular year largely take place in years when alterations were made to the pensions regulatory regime. For example, the Social Security Act 1986, which came into force in 1988, permitted contracting-out of the State Earnings Related Pension Scheme on a money purchase basis for the first time; the Pensions Act 1995, which came into force in 1997, contained measures to increase security for members of occupational pension schemes.

It is important to note that the increases and decreases in these figures do not necessarily reflect large alterations in the overall coverage of occupational pension schemes. For example, most of the schemes registered in the late 1980's and the vast majority of the schemes wound-up in the late 1990's were small schemes with few members.

Letter from Alan Burnham to Mr. Laurence Robertson, dated 10 April 2001:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about Gnr. H. J. Wilson, 118 Field Regiment RA, number 2558494 and his entitlement to the Government's ex-gratia payment to surviving members of the British Groups who were held prisoner by the Japanese during the Second World War.

I can confirm that a request for a claim form was received by the Agency on 6 April 2001 and a form was sent to Gnr. Wilson the same day. Once the completed form is returned, his application will be considered straight away.

I hope this information is helpful.

Departmental Policies (Hampstead and Highgate)

Ms Glenda Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people in Hampstead and Highgate will benefit from the latest rise in Child Benefit. [158011]

Angela Eagle: The information as requested is not available.

However, the latest information shows there are 8,565 families with 14,964 children in the Hampstead and Highgate parliamentary constituency receiving Child Benefit.

Since 1997 the rate of Child Benefit for the first child has increased by 26 per cent. in real terms. The rates from April 2001 are £15.50 for the first child and £10.35 for all other children.

Notes:

1. Figures are based on the November 2000 100 per cent. extract of the Child Benefit computer system.

2. Cases are allocated to each parliamentary constituency by matching the postcode against the relevant version of the ONS Postcode Directory. Constituency boundaries are represented as at May 1997.

Ms Glenda Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people in Hampstead and Highgate are benefiting from the Disability Income Guarantee. [158018]

Mr. Bayley: It is estimated that in 2001–02 approximately 500 cases will benefit from the Disability Income Guarantee in the Hampstead and Highgate constituency.

Notes:

1. The figures are based on data taken from November 2000 5 per cent. scans of the Income Support and Disability Living Allowance computer systems.

2. Due to the small sample sizes involved these figures are subject to a high degree of sampling error and should be used only as a guide.

Ms Glenda Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the effects, with statistical information, on Hampstead and Highgate of his Department's policies since 2 May 1997. [158016]

Mr. Rooker: The Department's policies and initiatives have made a significant contribution to the Government's overall objectives of:

Eradicating child poverty in 20 years, and halving it within 10;

promoting work as the best form of welfare for people of working age while protecting the position of those in greatest need; and,

combating poverty and promoting security and independence in retirement for today's and tomorrow's pensioners.

In the period since May 1997 the number of people claiming Jobseeker's Allowance nationally has reduced from 1,562,400 to 960,600; in Hampstead and Highgate the number has reduced from 4,600 to 2,500. Since May 1997 the number of lone parents who claim Income Support has decreased from 1,013,500 to 894,100 nationally and in Hampstead and Highgate from 2,500 to 2,100.

Older people are disproportionately affected by fuel poverty. So we have introduced Winter Fuel Payments to help with their heaviest fuel bill. Ms Glenda Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people in Hampstead and Highgate will benefit from the increase in Minimum Income Guarantee. [158010]

Mr. Rooker: We estimate that over 2 million pensioners in Great Britain as a whole will benefit from this April's increases to the Minimum Income Guarantee rates and capital limits. As well as those pensioners who might be newly entitled in Hampstead and Highgate, some 3,000 pensioners who are currently entitled will benefit from the increase.

Benefits Agency

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, (1) pursuant to his answer of 5 April 2001, Official Report, column 260W, what is the average amount of time decision makers have been employed in the Benefits Agency prior to being appointed to that position; [158007]

(2) how many decisions made by decision makers in the Benefits Agency have been reversed in (a) 1998, (b) 1999 and (c) 2000; [157993]

(3) pursuant to his answer of 5 April 2001, Official Report, column 260W, how many decision makers in the Benefits Agency earn annually (a) between £10 and £12,000, (b) £12 to £15,000, (c) £15 to £18,000, (d) £18 to £25,000 and (e) more than £25,000; [158009]

(4) pursuant to his answer of 5 April 2001, Official Report, column 260W, what the procedure is whereby hon. Members may establish direct contact on behalf of constituents with a particular decision maker. [157977]

Angela Eagle: Staff are not employed specifically as decision makers and are not separately identifiable. It is not therefore possible to establish how long staff have been employed in the Benefits Agency prior to undertaking work which involves an element of decision making or the number of decision makers in the pay ranges specified.

Following the introduction of the decision making and appeals (DMA) provisions during the period July to November 1999 the Benefits Agency has collected data about the numbers of decisions across the major benefits that are revised internally following reconsideration. From the introduction of the DMA provisions until the end of March 2000, approximately 38,000 decisions were revised. From April 2000 to the end of February 2001 approximately 102,000 decisions were revised. This includes decisions that were revised following a request from the customer and those decisions that were revised on the instigation of the decision maker.

There is no formal procedure in place specifically for hon. Members to establish direct contact with an individual decision maker.

Individual decision makers will provide their name and a contact telephone number to customers when asked to do so. They will also include their name and contact number when issuing individual letters to customers. However, individual decision makers' names are not identified on Agency computer generated decision notices.

As the customer's representative, an hon. Member would be able to approach the individual decision maker, in the same way as any other representative, if they were of the view that it was appropriate to do so. However, as I stated in my written answer on 5 April 2001, Official Report, column 260W the accepted procedure has been for hon. Members to contact the Local Office Manager where a reply is required.

CABINET OFFICE

People's Panel Support Group

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office if she will list the members of the People's Panel Support Group, indicating those who are civil servants. [158006]

Marjorie Mowlam: There are 19 members of the People's Panel Support Group. One is from the Thomas Coram Research Institute, one from the Local Government Association, one from the National Consumer Council and two from MORI, who administer the panel.

Among civil servants, there are up to five representatives from different parts of the Cabinet Office, two from the Department of Health, one from the Home Office, one from the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions, one from the Department for Education and Employment, one from the Employment Service, two from the Scottish Executive and one from the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister for Northern Ireland.

Membership of the group is liable to change as individuals change jobs or responsibilities.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what are the terms of reference of the People's Panel Support Group. [158008]

Marjorie Mowlam: The terms of reference for the People's Panel Support Group are

> "to advise the Modernising Public Services group [in the Cabinet Office] on issues relating to the use and development of the People's Panel".

Press Advisers

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office since 1996 which personal press advisers to Cabinet Ministers have been funded (a) in whole and (b) in part from public funds; for which Cabinet members they worked; how much they were paid; what staffing, accommodation and access to official information was provided for them; and if she will make a statement. [157310]

Mr. Stringer: Departmental press officers are appointed to serve Ministers and the Department in which they work. They are not appointed as personal press officers. Some special advisers advise on media related issues. Questions about them are a matter for the individual Ministers concerned.

Civil Service (Equal Pay)

Barbara Follett: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office if she will list the measures the Government have taken to ensure equal pay within the Civil Service since May 1997. [157693]

Mr. Stringer: Guidance was issued by the Cabinet Office to all Departments and agencies in October 1998 in order to raise awareness of the implications of equal pay legislation. The guidance was subsequently incorporated into the Civil Service Management Code which requires Departments and agencies to undertake periodic equal pay reviews.

The Modernising Government White Paper published in March 1999 set out the Government's plans to modernise the public services including their pay systems. The Civil Service response to the White Paper was set out in Sir Richard Wilson's report to the Prime Minister of December 1999. The report requires all Departments and agencies to review their pay and performance management systems.

In addition, virtually all Civil Service posts are underpinned by an analytical job evaluation system designed and tested to be free of any inherent gender bias. The main Civil Service job evaluation system was updated and equality tested before being issued to Departments and agencies in June 1999.

Promotional Campaigns

Mr. Lansley: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office if she will list the television, newspaper and radio advertising and other promotional campaigns conducted by (a) her Department, (b) its agencies and (c) its departmental public bodies, in each of the past five years, showing for each the expenditure incurred by her Department; and if she will make a statement. [153417]

Mr. Stringer: The information requested on television, newspaper and radio advertising undertaken by the Department is as follows:
